A Town Manager

In these days of economic problems, it is not surprising that a number of municipalities are looking for a town manager.

The article explains that depending on the size of the community, a city manager can expect a salary of from $5,000 to an average of $22,350 a year.

We would find that hard to believe in this community but as the area expands and develops the thought might be worth mentally storing for the opportune time.

At least 38 Canadian cities have adopted the plan so far and in the United States, more than half the cities between 25,000 and 100,000 population have it.

In some cases public funds had to be used to meet the cost of the water works.

With a lack of money, the manager is left with a difficult task. The manager is left with a difficult task.

I recall that for years after I became editor of the Free Press, mail from many institutions continued to come addressed to H. P. Moore.

A few weeks ago, someone informed in Acton that the band was first organized and a change that used to be used came immediately to mind.

Just for old times' sake, I got out an engraving of the late John C. Hill. I hope you old-timers enjoy looking at it just as I have.

The band was under Mr. Hill's leadership when I was first interested and got an album and my instruction on how to play it.

Rockwood Resident Builds Church Font

One of Rockwood's older residents, Richard Harris, who has lived in the village all his life, recently celebrated a birthday.

Always a busy man, Mr. Harris found time recently to make a baptismal font for the Rockwood Presbyterian church.

He is probably best known for the energetic way he gathers the Rockwood local news.
