Can You Afford to Miss?

Can you honestly afford to miss the nom-Ination meeting for Acton officials being held tonight in the Robert Little School Auditor-

We feel most citizens can't. Most find taxes and their payment difficult enough that they should be interested in how those funds are spent and the capability of those who administer them.

Tax paying time is hardly the time to register the dissatisfactions that grows. Neither is the street corner the place to seek the answers. Nomination meetings in Acton in past years have indicated the interest citizens have in the affairs of the community. Attendance has been large although in terms of those eligible the percentage attending is small.

Nomination meeting is truly a citizens' night too because the present officials attend prepared to report on their stewardship of the affairs of the town, the public utilities commission and the public school board. Here is the opportunity to ask questions and seek answers it is a place for intelligent discussion and an opportunity to see in person any who may seek municipal office for the Briefly any resident of Acton who occupled property assessed at $500 and on which the taxes are paid may qualify for election. His nomination must be made between 7 p.m. and B.p.m. on forms provided during the meeting tonight and filed with the clerk. If he is not present at the meeting the nomination will be accepted only if he has indicated his willingness to allow nomination, in writing. A person nominated for more than one position must indicate which position he will stand for before 9 p.m. or he will be understood to have chosen the position to which he was first nominated. Those who plan to seek election have until 9 p.m. the following night to complete their qualification papers.

Don't pass up tonight's nomination meeting unless you can afford to pay your taxes without question.

They Need Your Help

For many centuries there has existed the mistaken idea that the retarded child cannot be trained. Truth of the matter is, they CAN be trained, they ARE being trained and they will continue to be trained, dependant on the support of the public in their cause.

It has only been since the end of the war, that an interest has been taken in these children. Small but hopeful bands of parents get together and decided to do something about their retarded children and through their faith and determinination, schools were started and the mentally handicapped child is now being recognized by a society that once shunned him.

It happened locally, when in 1955 a group of Millon parents gathered to discuss a school for their children, who were unable to attend classes in public schools. They started their work with three pupils, a teacher, and only a handful of adult backers. Today they have 10 pupils, enlarged quarters, a teacher and a principal, and over 100 members of the association. Their pupils include five from Milton, three from Acton, one from Esquesing and one from Trafalgar . . . and there is the possibility that in the near future five more pupils from the district will be enrolled for classes.

Next step up their ladder of achievement is a new school where the pupils may be instructed in the proper surroundings and with the proper equipment.

The Milton and District Association for Retarded Children has declared November 15 to 26 as Retarded Children's Week in North Halton, to coincide with the National observance. During this week, an effort is being made to acquaint district residents with the work of the association. The public information campaign will be followed with a fund-raising campaign, which has two goals: to offset a nearly $700 deficit on the 1960 budget of operations; and to start a $10-15,-000 sinking fund for the building campaign next year.

Give generously when the visitor calls at your home. Remember, retarded children need more help!

Municipal affairs have grown more complex as the field of services has grown and expanded. It is becoming increasingly difficult for men with full time jobs to take on what is in effect a part-time job of municipal or community service.

A breath of fresh air was blown over the picture in about 1954 though when the three towns of Acton, Milton and Georgetown decided to wipe out animosities and sit down regularly to consider problems that were mutual and on which each might offer guidance to the others. Thus was the North Halton Urban Board formed

During the intervening five years the board, unofficial as it is, has weathered storms, co-operatively considered such subjects as full time engineers, extended telephone service, industrial promotion, natural gas contracts, fire fighting areas, dog control and a host of other subjects that affected the three municipalities.

Lacking any legislation that would provide for establishing such a board, the group is entirely unofficial. It has no power except that of reference of subjects back to the individual councils for their considered action. Still it has accomplished a surprising amount.

On Saturday evening the three councils, their wives and municipal officials held an annual dinner that strengthened the fellowship and co-operative spirit of the North Halton Urban Board. If it came to drawing battle lines on individual community problems we have no doubt each member would defend his municipality's position but this is commonly understood and accepted.

Several speakers spoke for the continuation of the North Halton Urban Board recommending it to future councils. This we can endorse if it continues on its informal basis because in this it becomes, to our mind, a study group on municipal affairs. In these days of complex municipal problems nothing is more important to local officials than the study group referred to as the North Halton Urban Board. .

Inhumanity to Man

There is perhaps no greater inhumanity to man than that practised by itinerent contractors who prey on elderly people for chimney repairs or some other household repair work.

A Hamilton paper just last week recounted the trial of two men who billed an 80year-old man $965 then cut the price to $865 'cash for "very poor" home repairs worth not more than $100.

It seems the contractor had offered to repair the elderly man's sidewalk for $19 and because this price was reasonable was asked to make some minor repairs in the basement.

The work was all done in a day and when the bill was presented for $965, the owner paid because he thought he had to. Now the sidewalk is falling apart and reputable cement contractors testified the work was "very poor" and inferior.

The elderly man's money was recovered and the two "repair men" are awaiting sentence but there must be a moral in the story. Surely it is only reasonable that before itinerant workmen are engaged some sound estimate should be obtained.

Similar situations have happened in this town where it was never dreamed possible which should alert most to the problems of not knowing the workmen you engage.

Time may wear it thin but if you don't know the goods, know the workman.

Do you know that in the U.S., the teen-age population has a buying power of $80 billion a year? A chap from the States told me that the other day, and I was suitably startled. Or maybe it was $8 million a day. It doesn't matter,

I presume the same is true in Canada, proportionately, Let's say there are four million teenagers in Canada A conservative estimate of their direct spending would be an average of $2 a week, each. That's $8 million a week, $416 million a year,

Add to that their maireet spendwhat that de the money bepent by The their parents on clothes and cars for them, foods and fads for them, schooling and spoiling for them. and they are probably the most expensive and economically influentlal segment of society ever

Rather a shocker, isn't it? It was not always thus. Only in the past generation has the age group between 12 and 20 fastened on the body of society with a vampire's tooth, and inhaled with gusto. Never before in history have commerce and culture danced attendance on the maudlin mind of the teens.

I'm not complaining, or saying it's all wrong. I'm merely observing. Nor do I blame it on the kids. Start feeding a new pup choice morsels from your table, even though you know it's wrong. Pretty soon he's clawing at your leg if you're not handing it down fast enough. Next thing you know he's a grown dog, is sitting at the table

And thus, in the 1950's, emerged full-blown that phenomena -The Teen-ager-master of all he or she surveys, as capricious as Catherine the Great, as misdirected as a monsoon. One can only look forward to the 1960's with utter foreboding

Glorification of the teen-ager has had several results, all of them dire. It has unleashed a veritable flood of garbage in the fields of entertainment and publishing. It has convinced even the more sensthle of our youth that they are as important as the sycophants .say

It has made them believe that they are enjoying the most exciting, the richest years of their lives, which is fure crap It has played hell with family life, because it has assured them that everyone who is not a teen-ager is either infantile or an imbec-

Don't ask me for the answers. I just have the questions. The only thing I can suggest is to cut off ruthlessly their finances. Which would bring down about our ears a torrent from the soft drink companies, the drive-in movies, the people who specialize in clothes and shoes for teens, and everybody else who has a finger in that big

Don't think that I am attacking the teen-agers, or that I have a formula for revamping society. It's just that I have a problem. I have a son who is 12. When I was 12 I wanted to be a cowboy, Tarzan-of-the-Apes, a great explorer, or, on dull days, maybe just a millionarie. You know what my kid wants to be? He wants to be a teen-ager. It's very depressing.

Press, Thursday, November 25, 1986

At two c'clock on Tuesday morning, the starm was given that the Action House was on fire. An hour and a half later, nothing was left of the building and contents tool the blackened walls. The for spread so rapidly that very little of value was left and the leas to Mr E R Bugger, the proprietor, will be very heavy, the inautance being considerably less than the value of the property

When the fire was discovered by two of the boarders, Mesers Russell and Den Campbell, it had gained considerable headway It was located in the fluor between the second and third stories, and had evidently been caused by an overheated stoyepipe Mesers. Rus. sell and Camubell gave the alarm. The house was full of smoke and there was great confusion Every resen was occupied and the inmates got out with little more than their sleeping apparel. This was the case of Mr and Mrs Biggar and their son Gerald

Owing to the ice storm, the fire alarm rope would not work and the town bell sounded only a feetile worning The firemen consequently got out with a fair degree of promptitude and a good number of citizens knew nothing of the fire until morning.

At the meeting of the council last week, Engineer Hurst reported that several of the copper flues in the fire engine were leaking and asked they be replaced at ance. An expert from the shops of the Canadian Fire Engine Company, Landon, came to town on Monday to make the repairs He found it would be advantageous to send the engine to the repair shops at London to have the work done thoroughly. While he was here, it was put to work at House fire and the need for the necessary repairs were very clearly demonstrated An engine from Lundon will be sent on loan until repairs are completed.

The ice storm on Monday was one of the most destructive ever known in this locality. Beautiful maples and other shade trees were broken down; apple and pear trees suffered disastrously; telephone, telegraph and electric wires were broken down in all directions. The weight of the ice on everything exposed was enormous. Several of the streets were rendered impass-
