YOU are Important

Basic Rules for Good Photos

It is important to realize right at the start that the most important part of your camera is you. A camera is a piece of machinery and like any machinery can be made to do what you want it to do. The basic rules of photography can be learned through a simple step-by-step technique. The following rules apply primarily to the box camera fan, but the advanced amateur cannot afford to forget them either. Here is how an experienced camera fan would handle a simple situation such as a small child receiving a new doll from her father at the front door of their home:

Defines Idea
1. Define the picture idea. First, he defines the picture idea. That is, what he wants the picture to say. In this case, it probably would be the child's happiness over receiving the gift.

Limits the subject matter.
Now he decides what physical items he wants in the snapshot. In this case they should be the father presenting the gift and the girl receiving it, with a simple home background. He wants the picture-story to stand out clearly so anything more would detract from it.

Choose a location.
Next he plans where to snap the picture from. He checks the sun's angle, but observes that he can't take the picture from the sidewalk because trees and bushes would make a confused background. However, he notices that the doorway is shaded while the sun fills the front step with plenty of light. The shaded doorway will make a plain but significant backdrop, and the sunny step a well illuminated place for father and daughter.

Check the distance.
He checks his distance from the subjects, making certain the picture will not be all house with small figures lost against it. He gets close— even his cameras allow getting within six feet— because he wants his subjects to fill the picture.

Elevation Step
5. Decide on camera elevation. Finally he figures out his camera elevation, that is, deciding whether the picture will look best taken straight on, looking down on the subjects, or looking up at them. At the same time he checks the angle, moving from side to side.

By following this brief step-by-step method, many beginners will see picture ideas they did not realize existed. Run back over the five points and imagine the variety of photographs available — father walking towards his child, another of the child waiting expectantly, father hiding the doll behind his back, father presenting the doll to the child, the child's happy face, a thank you kiss, the two taking a careful look at the doll. Here you have a whole picture story. Use these simple rules when photographing any subject and you can't go wrong.

Check Your Errors
All this is fine, the beginner might say, but now he would

Roquefort, sometimes called the "king of cheese," was made as far back as 1070 A.D. at the monastery of Conques, France. By international copyright, the name cannot be used for similar types of cheese made elsewhere. The American product, "Blue Cheese," closely resembles Roquefort, which is sheep's milk cheese streaked with bread mold, while blue cheese is made from cows' milk. Blue cheese is cured in rooms where moisture and temperature are artificially controlled so that they are similar to conditions found in caves where Roquefort cheese is kept.
