Unique Idea

Animals Aid Art Appreciation

A unique idea for the resident children in the appreciation of art is planned by the Province of Ontario for the new Provincial School for Deaf Children here.

The idea, conceived by architects Marani, Morris and Allan, is for a large stone animal, large enough for the children to climb on, to be placed in each of seven play courts and for the children to be encouraged to play on them.

A well known art critic has said about the idea that special sanction for the use of art for fun, like this, may result in the boys and girls going out with the extraordinary advantage of an eye for sculptural mass.

House Symbols

Marani, Morris and Allan hope that the animals which will be the house symbols will also encourage the deaf children to associate themselves affectionately with their own houses.

F. B. Cox the sculptor who himself taught at Upper Canada College before taking up sculpture as a career, originally modelled 13 animals, from which the seven, a buffalo, a mountain sheep, a Canadian black bear, a deer with fawn, a turtle, a rabbit and a swan were chosen.

Made of Indiana limestone with the bear done in Nezzard and the rabbit and swan in Portland stone, the animals are created specifically to appeal to children and all have an impish or clever suggestion of humor.

BEST DRIVERS

A professional driver is one whose livelihood is gained by the operation of a motor vehicle on public highways. It has been proven that he is not only careful in his work-a-day driving, but he can also boast the lowest accident frequency of any occupational group when driving his own car on days off, or during leisure hours.

SMALL MINORITY

In 1961 about 30 per cent of eligible students in U.S. high schools took a thorough course in Driver Education reports the Ontario Safety League. In spite of developing interest here in this life-preserving course, the number of Canadian 16 year olds who receive driver instruction in school is statistically insignificant.
