Rockwood Presbyterian Observes Centennial With Large Crowds

The hundredth anniversary of Presbyterianism in Rockwood was commemorated Sunday in Rockwood Presbyterian Church with overflow attendance at both morning and evening services.

Rev. Dr. David Gowdy of Central Church, Galt, was the guest preacher and delivered two very impressive messages based on the words "well done" and "ye are the light of the world". The service was conducted by the minister, Rev. Dr. George Aitken.

In the evening, Rev. Fred Williamson, a former minister, took part in the service.

The choir, under the direction of Mrs. John Freeman, the organist, rendered special music at each service and was assisted in the morning by a male quartet from Campbellville, Jack McPhail, Robert Elliott, Lloyd Early and Robert McPhail. In the evening, Mrs. C. Lush and Mrs. C. Robinson sang two duets.

A public address system was installed to carry the proceedings out to those who sat in the spacious vestibule and to those who found seating accommodation in the Sunday School rooms.

A piece of birthday cake baked by Mrs. William Swanson was provided for all who attended morning service, and light refreshments were served by the ladies at the close of the evening service.

A short history of the congregation was prepared, tracing the origin of the church and naming many who had once been members of it. The charter roll was given and some interesting facts relating to conditions in the early years of the congregation.
