Take Time to Listen ...

Stein the Fewell Move News) All through the building was heard the steady whine of mechinery being run at top speed. The meditive was running smoothly, and production was up to capacity. All seemed well as the openetors continuelly checked the instruments. Sud-slowly came to a helt. Production cased, and a group of workmen was idled.

Mechanical crews were nushed in, and the mouble area was located. The lubrication system had falled. An oil pump, they in comparison to the huge beth of machine, but a very vital unit of its operation, had cossed to function.

The crews went to work. The supposedly offending unit was removed and a new one installed, but the system still would not function. As elderly clean-up men edged his wey into the group and tried to point out something. A young mechanic, fresh from the try covered halls of learning, brusquely thrust him saids. "Out of the way, aldtimer," said he, "we do not have time to listen to you."

More equipment was dismantled and replaced, and again the machine was started. Again the system would not work. The old man once more attempted to speak, and once more was told, "Go and do your chores, Grandpa, and leave this job to the ones who know what it is about." More work, more equipment, and an other try. The warning lights'come on to indicate another failure. Yempers had become frayed and frustration was evident. On being questioned by the young mechanic, the old man taid. "I saw an olf drig, and recalled a similar case some years ago. I tried twice to you, but you would not listen." The plant manager, an unobserved witness to the whole incident took the young man selds. "Son", he said, would like to pass on to you a bit of advice received years ago. Man learns by listening, not to the sound of his own voice, but to the opinions and ideas of others, thereby placing himself a more secure position when it comes to make concrete decisions. But when man becomes emoured with the sound of his own voice the exclusion of all else, he cases to learn, and Day, the baseball tournament, H. Worden, has been engined be stagnation sets in.
