

"OUR BOYS Returning from Camp" was A. T. Brown's title for this photograph, taken on Mill St., July 2, 1898. The Methodist church (since razed) shows in the background. The vacant lot is where the Y.M.C.A. is now. (A. T. Brown Collection)

Vigilantes punish wife beater - 1881

Like a crowd of Ku-Klux-Klan operators a group of indignant men gathered one dark night in 1881 for a prank on one particularly ardent wife beater. The "lark" they hoped would cure him of the abuse towards his meek wife.

The crowd stealthily proceeded up to the Glendinning house on Young Street. The target was drunk as usual and without difficulty the crowd got a rope around him, led him to the old mill dam and after explanations of the reason of this prank, the rope was removed and he was unceremoniously dumped into the pond. As soon as his head would bob up out of the chilly waters, someone would push it down.

This continued until the wretched fellow had not strength enough left to come up again. Then there was a flurry for fear he had drowned. The crowd finally succeeded in getting the unconscious man from the pond and not until Dr. McGarvin arrived did the wife beater regain consciousness. As he opened his eyes he gazed upon a crowd of Actonians more scared than himself and before the week was over he and his family had left town.

Old willow gives street name

Willow Street received its name from the big Willow tree that stood on the corner of Mill and Willow. It was planted by the late William Steel in the spring of 1853 and was 16 feet, 9 inches in circumference when it was cut down to make room for the Merchant's Bank now the Bank of Montreal as part of the Warren Block.
