Despite the ice on the pond, the dredge is still working at the far end near the Breezes. Condition of the ice is still dangerous and warnings have been issued to young skaters.

Santa reappears

Gives out over 200 gifts at Micro Plastics party

Even elves get confused sometimes

Cartoons, refreshments and magical moments from a magician labelled the Amazing Mr. Jake entertained over 400 parents and children at Building Products Micro Plastic division Christmas party Saturday in the Robert Little school auditorium but the show-stopper was the appearance of Santa Claus, accompanied by six of his most comely elves. Micro Plastics' employees' association staged the event which saw Santa and his helpers hand out gifts and candy to over 200 children from the toddler stage to age 15.

promptly sat down and distributed the presents with a wise word and open ear for all the youngsters.

Elves Sandra Sinclair, Gail Fryer, Lois Kirkwood, Fiona Gidman, Sally Dick and Sandra Irwin, a fetching crew in fur-trimmed finery, assisted St. Nick. Coffee and soft drinks were served during the program.

Norman Elliott was master of ceremonies for the program and called out names with eager response from youngsters present.

Cartoons were shown by Alf Long as the projectionist and he also found time to record the reaction of youngsters to Santa Claus on film.

The Amazing Mr. Jake proved to be a more than adequate replacement for the magician originally billed on the program who was suddenly stricken with appendicitis.

Pulling a bunny from a top hat after two previous tries had netted only a large handkerchief and then a small one in that order, he had youngsters howling with disbelief. But it was a real rabbit and well-rubbed eyes couldn't erase him.

Em Cee Norm Elliott claimed Santa Claus' appearance was being delayed because the Amazing Mr. Jake had used some disappearing powder on the old saint. Pressure was brought to bear and the venerable, bewhiskered old gent finally appeared.
