By Wendy Thomson

A few weeks ago I was watching a friend finishing up breakfast with toast and applesauce—or rather, a mound of applesauce held in position by a piece of toast. I was intrigued by the thought that there was more to that old standby than just having it in bowls with cream for dessert, or in blobs with pork chops (something I still haven't tried).

Maybe it was just that I had an eye on applesauce after that, but I began to see all sorts of interesting things to do with it. While visiting with my mother in Oakville, I smelled something marvelous baking away in her oven and dropped small hints right and left about being hungry, but she sent me on my way, as mothers will, with nothing in my stomach but a recipe in my head—Spareribs and Applesauce. The night I tried it here, my mother's nose must have been working overtime, as it appeared on the door-step (with her) just as I was serving the spareribs. I proved how magnanimous ratty daughters can grow up to be by letting her stay. I even fed her, too. One suggestion—if you are making this for a late supper and your appetite is early, make arrangements to sit outside for the last hour of baking, as the smell of this roasting might well make you a nervous, nail-chewing wreck before it's done.

Shortly after, a recipe from Peterborough arrived in the mail for an Applesauce-date Cake. I had hardly read it over once, before I was humming away in the kitchen with spoon in hand. This recipe made a lovely spicy moist cake. Everyone who dropped by that day got a piece of it and agreed it was worth telling about.

With Hallowe'en, came apples. Even though our youngsters have one day in their lunches, we were getting snowed under (no pun intended). I cooked them all down, plain, unsweetened and unsipped, to put in the freezer. I kept a quart or so in the frig to finish experimenting with, first with Peanut-butter cake, then with Ablekage, a dessert pudding. The cake I wasn't that enthusiastic about, but the small fry were as they are about anything peanut-buttery. The pudding was a pleasant surprise—the recipe was in a 4-H project book and sounded too simple to be interesting, but was really quite nice.

Famous battles answer roll call

The names of battles of World War I or World War II answered the roll call at the meeting of Acton Women's Institute in the library Wednesday, November 6. There were many replies, and Miss Nora Kenney recalled she was present at the unveiling in London of the Ypres memorial.

The Institute party was held at the Manor Friday, Nov. 8, at 50 cents per member. The bus left at 7 p.m. Mrs. Dodds and Mrs. Nelles looked after the lunch.

Gifts for shut-ins for Christmas are to be bought. Members will hold an auction sale at the January meeting. In February, a euchre and penny sale will be held.

Historical and research convener Miss D. Simmons gave a reading on how air mail came to Canada. Agriculture and Canadian Industries convener Mrs. Lindsay reported on the plowing match.

Mrs. Lindsay and Miss Marjorie Hall gave a full report on the area convention in Guelph. The district annual will be held at Scotch Block May 21. Date loaf and maple cream are to be judged.

Miss Simmons conducted a contest, with Mrs. S. Holmes the winner.

Mrs. G. Fryer was appointed to buy an electric kettle and teapot for the W.I. meetings.

A vote of thanks was given by Mrs. Lindsay for the lunch committee of Mrs. Fryer, Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. Harris. Miss Marjorie Hall, the president, conducted the meeting.
