The smart cookies at McCormick's use Natural Gas.

We're not going to say natural gas should take all the credit for the delicious cookies, biscuits and wafers baked on McCormick's London-Ontario premises.

Producing millions of pounds of product annually takes more successful business ingredients than we can probably imagine.

But natural gas does play an important role at McCormick's.

Natural gas provides a better working climate for over 1,000 employees. It's the energy source that heats over 600,000 square feet of plant space in the winter, and air conditions part of the same area in the summer.

Because natural gas is versatile, it helps McCormick's bake a better biscuit. Natural gas heats the peanut roaster, the chocolate tanks, the cookie and cracker ovens, the shortening and rotating cookie oil tank, the wafer oven and the candy drum.

The process of cooking biscuits and wafers requires exact temperature control and McCormick's find natural gas just what's needed to do the job.

Natural gas heats all the general purpose hot water that flows through the McCormick's plant, too.

Why tell you all this when your office or store or factory or home heating needs probably aren't nearly as immense as McCormick's?

Simply because natural gas is the cleanest, most dependable, most modern energy source, no matter what your dimensions. Talk to your gas company representative, architect or heating contractor soon. He'll give you all the facts on how easy it is to install and maintain natural gas. You don't have to make cookies to be a smart one.
