At Rethy, deep in Eastern Congo, there is a missionary who is a trained optician who specializes in adapting used spectacles for his African friends.

Recently he received from the West Nile district of Uganda a parcel of some 40 pairs of glasses, with the request that he should put stronger lenses in them. They were, he said, "the strangest assortment of ancient frames" that he had ever seen, but he set to work and did what was needed.

The reason for the request? A new Bible had been published for the West Nile region; the print is smaller than that of its predecessor, and so a number of Bible readers found themselves in difficulties. This made a very worthwhile job for the optician, and he was able to fit the assorted frames with the necessary lenses.

Deputy Reeve Ted Tyler proposed that council should retain about 50 per cent of municipally-owned land and sell it to residents who have been in Acton for several years, during the enquiry session at last week's council meeting.

"Acton is landlocked with speculators and developers," the deputy-reeve told council, "and it is impossible for a man to buy a lot. It forces people to go to the land developers."

"You can't buy a lot in Acton or outside town, Mr. Tyler maintained. "It is all controlled by developers."

He asked No. one committee to consider holding over half the town-owned lots and pre-sell them to Acton people who might want to purchase ones.

"There would be no debentures for sewer and water on a scheme like this," the deputy-reeve declared, "and the town could still reap a good profit."

The deputy-reeve suggested that residents with 15 years or more residence would get first choice, then the 10 year residents, then five years and so on until the land was sold. He said the municipality should forbid the buyer to resell for a certain period to avoid the possibility residents would just act as go between for buyers who weren't eligible.

Sell lots to residents — dep. reeve
