A GIANT OF FINANCE.

SIR C. H. WILSON THE RENOWNED ENGLISH FINANCIER.

A Man Whose Dealings are With Figures Big Enough to Make Your Head Swim—Interesting Matter of All Sorts.

This country is to-day the scene of the labors of a financial saint of the very first importance in the person of Sir Charles Hivers Wilson, Knight of St. Michael and St. George, and Companion of the Bath, etc. Sir Rivers is over here as the champion and representative of the European bondholders of the Egyptian loan, and the result he has already attained in this capacity is simply marvellous. Through the instrumentality of Sir Rivers the interest of things like 400,000,000 belonging to those worthy and confiding investors in American railroad securities. This last sum, however, does not mean anything to Sir Rivers. He is in the habit of dealing with money in great lumps, and that the bare mention of these little millions has not caused the head of the ordinary individual to whirl, is a fact that speaks for itself.

As Comptroller General of the Egyptian National Debt—an office which he has held since 1876 and which he only resigned last month, Sir Rivers has had charge of funds amounting to the stupendous total of between two hundred and thirty to two hundred and forty millions of pounds sterling. The income of this vast sum amounts to some fifteen millions of pounds sterling, all of which it was part of the duties of his office to invest. It will be readily seen, therefore, that it is not the amount of the interests which have been confided to his care which troubles him.

In appearance Sir Rivers is very much like the Marquis of Dufferin, both in form and feature. He is thin and tall, and might be a man of some fifty-five years of age. His hair has not yet turned, although his whiskers and moustache are quite grizzled. He has a most amiably humorous twinkle in his eye, which would suggest that this same kind face can be very hard and firm at times, and that it can be so probably no one knows better than His Highness Ismail Pacha.

Sir Rivers was brought up in that nursery of good breeding and repose of manner, namely, the Treasury Department of the government, and he shows it in every movement. His intellect is full of sublime bonhomie, with a distinct touch of a Chesterfieldian politeness, and his method of speech is slightly of the "er" of the public speaker, and his voice is very clear and penetrating.

Sir Rivers is above all things a diplomat and shows it in a thousand different ways. Whether speaking of men or places, he always conveys the idea that he knows a great deal more of the subject than he is saying, and this gives him a suggestion of reserved power, with a suspicion of the iron hand in the velvet glove. As regard his dress, Sir Rivers is a bit of a dandy, but only to the extent that after leaving him no one could recall one prominent feature of his attire.

It is, of course, with Egypt that the name of Sir Charles Rivers Wilson must be always associated. One circumstance stands out in this connection which speaks for itself. When he first went out to Egypt, in 1876, as the representative of the British government, the country was practically bankrupt, and the seven per cent unified bonds were quoted at 86. To-day, after various conversions, these same unified bonds, the interest on which has been scaled down in the meantime to four per cent., stand at about 103. To enter into the history of his Egyptian career would be impossible within the limits of this article, but the document which has passed into history is the report of the Commission d'Enquete, of which he was president, in succession to the late Ferdinand de Lesseps, which had for a result the practical recovery of 450,000 acres of the most fertile land in Egypt, which had been "annexed" by Ismail Pacha, and the placing of the finances and taxation on a basis of prosperity of which the wretched and downtrodden fellaheen had never dreamed or supposed possible.

Another historical episode in Sir Rivers' Egyptian career was when he threatened to adjourn the conference and withdraw. He went to the palace to make his adieux to the Khedive, who, after mumbling out an incoherent speech, placed in his hands a document which meant the complete surrender of his authority, accepting a constitutional government and placing himself entirely in the hands of England, France and Italy. Not the least of Sir Rivers' triumph in this connection is the fact that it was his personal influence which induced the Rothschilds to float a loan of eight and a half millions sterling on the security of the lands which he had compelled Ismail to disgorge. In giving the Egyptian sketch of the career of this great financier, it should be recorded that he still is one of the three English governmentdirectors of the Suez Canal.

On the subject of Ferdinand de Lesseps Sir Rivers is very eloquent. He had been a colleague of "the great Frenchman" and has nothing but admiration for him. He claims that De Lesseps should not be judged by the standard of ordinary men, but pays high tribute to his generous nature, broad views and enormous mental and physical activity. The manner in which he approached England when Lord Palmerston was Prime Minister—the bitterest enemy of his great scheme—after he had won his fight, commends him to the liveliest recognition. He knew that once cut the last and largest customers the canal would have—they number about eighty per cent of the whole—would be Englishmen, and so he approached them in the most liberal spirit and made them concessions which earned for him the odium of his fellow countrymen to an almost achieved a scheme which beat the great Napoleon himself, I am lost in admiration."

Discus of Slate.

The reasons assigned by the school committee for the discontinuance of slates, slate pencils, and sponges in the public schools and the substitution of paper, lead pencils and rubber erasers in their places are as follows:

1. A light gray mark upon a slightly darker grey surface is more or less indistinct and trying to the eyesight.

2. The resistance of the hard pencil upon the hard slate is trying to the muscles, and the resistance to which the muscles are thus trained must be overcome when beginning to write with pencil or pen upon paper.

3. The use of slates, slate pencils and sponges is a very unsightly custom and leads to and establishes very unsightly habits.—Boston Globe.

Catarrh Relieved in 10 to 60 Minutes.—One short puff of the breath through the Blower, supplied with each bottle of Dr. Agnew's Catarrh Powder, diffuses this powder over the surface of nasal passage. Painless and delightful to use, it relieves instantly and permanently cures catarrh, hay fever, colds, headache, sore throat, tonsilitis and deafness. 60 cents. At G. E. Morrow's.

A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

Their Dialogue After Reading the Medical Press.

HE:

Take, oh take those lips away!
Not that I wish you to refrain,
For but to taste them once again
I must certainly unbuckle mine.
Hereafter, you know, I've pledged myself
In our frequent lip-collisions
Never to let a kiss
Pass my lips unless
With [illegible] it comes.
Then I'll take it [illegible]
My decision is set,
Dear, my love, to fix my errors.
'Tis the consequence must prove
Of perusing doctor's poesy,
For these journals now declare
With [illegible] persistence, fierce,
That each kiss is [illegible]
Spreads [illegible] germs
That is why I say,
Take, oh! take those lips away!

SHE:

Say not thus to me, dearest,
For in vain is your endeavor,
For last night I never back afraid,
When new-fangled danger [illegible]
Darling, you know well enough
Love has [illegible]
And [illegible]
We shall [illegible]
As you love me, then, don't say,
Take, oh! take those lips away!

HE AND SHE:

We will never be ensnared
By the bellying bacillus,
Doctors, though they say their worst,
With dismay shall never fill us.
Let us, therefore, both of us,
Their last raven-croak dismissing,
Show that thus—and thus—and thus
We still mean to go on kissing.
Neither of us means to say,
"Take, oh! take those lips away!"
—London Truth.

A GIFTED PARISIAN DOG

Who Knew a Band of Burglars.

The amazing story of canine sagacity is told in a recent number of La Lanterne, of Paris. M. and Mme. Herisson, living in the Rue St. Sauveur, went to the theatre one evening, leaving their domicile guarded only by a very intelligent little dog, who answered to the name of Castor. They valued him highly, and often remarked: "Castor? We would not sell him for 10,000 francs."

They had not been long away when burglars entered the house. Castor, who was at that moment in the kitchen, swiftly swept the hours by chasing his tail, heard the noise, and not recognizing his master's step, pricked up his ears and listened. A moment more and he decided it must be thieves. To the proverbial fidelity of his race there was added in this wonderful dog the wisdom of serpents. Realizing that if he barked the intruders would seize and silence him forever, he sat down, covered his head with his paws and thought intently. At last a light broke over his mind, and he stole noiselessly from the house and ran swiftly to a near-by building which was in the course of construction. There he seized a lighted lantern in his mouth and returned with it to the house.

The ruse met with the success it deserved. The thieves, seeing the light in the adjoining room, believed themselves detected, and fled. Castor's joy knew no bounds, and when his owners returned they found him still rubbing his paws with satisfaction.

The Donkey in Jokes.

"By Jove!" said the country squire who had got the worst of an argument with Sydney Smith, "if I had those lips near a donkey, I'd make a parson of him straight away."

"Possibly," returned the wit, "but your father was evidently of a different mind." That is one type. Here is another: A man had a portrait taken with his children in a donkey carriage, he standing at the animal's head. Showing it to a friend, he asked his opinion of the likeness. "It's the very image of you," was the verdict, "but who is that holding your head?"

Here is still another specimen that recalls the "Society Upon the Stanislaw!" Two gentlemen in an auction-room were disputing the possession of a picture by a celebrated painter, which faithfully represented an ass. Finally one of them said: "My dear sir, it is of no use, I shall not give in. The painting once belonged to my grandfather and I intend to have it." "Oh! in that case," replied his rival, suavely, "I will give it up. I think you are fully entitled to it if it is one of your family portraits."

Next to this we may place the retort of the Irish girl, who, caught in the act of playing on Sunday morning and being accosted by the parish priest with the greeting, "Good morning, daughter of the evil one," replied promptly, "Good morning, father!"

The Kaiser Gavotte.

A square dance in which society is much interested is the Kaiser gavotte. This dance owes its origin to a German professor, who gave it its name in honor of Emperor William. The dance so delighted His Majesty that he soon ordered it to be danced at all the Court balls.

The Kaiser gavotte is a stately dance much resembling the minuet. As danced at the German Court balls a profound obeisance to the Emperor and Empress begins and ends the dance. The continuous figure leaves the beholder in a transport of admiration. Only a professor of dancing could describe every figure. Two figures which are particularly beautiful are called the rosette and the star.

The gavotte baldhea, however, is the most effective figure in the dance. The ladies, with their left hands, very daintily catch their skirts, lifting them ever so little, still enough to show satin slippers and clouds of lace. With right hands held high over their heads, they catch their partners' hands, and in this wise, balancing, one couple following another in succession, they make a grand tour of the ballroom. All the steps are stately and dignified, and only persons with natural [illegible] gavotte well.

Some time ago, while Harry Irving was in Edinburgh, a Scotch clergyman came and informed him that he was to attend the theatre that week for the first time in his life, to see one of the Lyceum productions. Irving felt duly flattered, and so expressed himself; but the divine, after a certain amount of stammering, confessed that he did not wish to see a play in which there was a ballet. Irving, greatly puzzled, informed him that there was no dancing in the piece he was then producing, but that, according to the slang of the "profession," the supernumeraries of both sexes were "the ballet," and hence probably arose his visitor's mistake. The worthy man's face beamed, and he took an affectionate leave of his host; but as the door he was seized with misgivings and suddenly demanded, point-blank: "If there is no ballet, Mr. Irving, why do people talk so much about your legs?" Irving's answer has not been chronicled.

Rheumatism Cured in a Day.

South American Rheumatic Cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action upon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at once the cause, and the disease immediately disappears. The first dose greatly benefits. 75 cents. Warranted by G. E. Morrow.

HEALTHY EXERCISE.

Yeah up and prance! Only thing to keep a woman in good condition. It's insufficient for some, confined to home, down as they are by the ailments and irregularities peculiar to their sex.

They're easily helped, though, there's a remedy in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—that will build up and cure every enfeebled woman. It's the prescription of a physician; has been tested in thousands of cases, and never found wanting.

The only risk that's taken is that of the manufacturers who promise to refund the money if no benefit is experienced.

This "Prescription" reaches the seat of the trouble. Dizziness, fainting spells, and nervous disorders, such as sleeplessness, chores or St. Vitus's dance, depend upon the irregularities and displacements of the special structures, the "Prescription" cures by regulating and correcting these functions and organic changes.

Nothing Strange.

Intelligent people, who realize the importance of the blood holds in keeping the body in a normal condition, find nothing strange in the number of diseases Hood's Sarsaparilla is able to cure. So many troubles result from impure blood, the best way to treat them is through the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla vitalizes the blood.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, assist digestion, prevent constipation.

Mr. J. Livingstone, chemist and druggist, Listowel, says, 10th July, 1894:—For over a year I have sold Stark's Powders and my customers speak very highly of them as a cure for sick and nervous headache, biliousness, stomach and liver complaints. They give great satisfaction and sell rapidly. Sold by all druggists at 25 cents a box. Very nice to take; instantaneous and permanent.

Mothers will find the Pain Killer invaluable in the nursery, and it should always be kept near at hand in case of accident. For pain in the breast take a little Pain-Killer in sweetened milk and water, bathing the breasts in it clear at the same time. If the milk passages are clogged, from cold, or other causes, bathing in the Pain-Killer will give immediate relief. Ask for the new bottle.

Covered With Liver Spots.

Gentlemen,—I was covered with liver spots over my back and chest. I took three bottles of your Burdock Blood Bitters and am now perfectly cured of liver complaint. I can truly say that I think B. B. B. the best medicine ever discovered.—L. Kitchen, Hamilton, Ont.
