THUNDERS OF OLD LONDON

The Most Famous Storm of the Last Century Was in 1840.

The most notable thunderstorms on record in London have generally occurred in the month of August. That which made the greatest impression on contemporary observers during the nineteenth century happened on the 1st of the month as long ago as the year 1840, and remarkable accounts of its ravages may be found in the journals of the day. A thunderstorm is not a good subject for a picture, but there appeared in one of the Illustrated papers a view of "London during the storm—from Blackheath," which, whether a work of pure imagination or actually drawn from nature, was pronounced admirable and impressive. The special feature of the storm was the hail [illegible] accompanied it. Among the [illegible] stood up, as it is [illegible] in the slide. The panes of glass which were broken by the icy shower were to be counted by hundreds of millions, and no great was the damage inflicted upon the plants and unsheltered that a meeting was afterward held, at which [illegible] was established for their relief. It is impossible, we are told, to imagine the aspect which the windows in London streets presented before the gardens, whose services were for a long time in a manner lost, had repaired the destructive [illegible] in each instance, numerous thoughts succeeded this [illegible] hail-storm, many actually coincided with periods of great heat, and what ever may be the precise relations of heat and electricity, a heavy fall of hail is seldom noticed except as the adjunct of a thunderstorm.—London Globe.

BAD SLEEPING HABITS.

Snoring, Grinding the Teeth and Nocturnal Whistling.

Man is the victim of bad habits in his sleep as well as in his waking hours. So distressing are some of these bad habits of sleep that they oblige wife and husband to occupy separate rooms, even at times causing divorce.

Snoring is of course the commonest. If not the worst of sleep's bad habits. Snoring may be remedied. There are a dozen patented devices—that, holding the mouth shut tight, prevent the snore.

Grinding the teeth is a disagreeable habit of sleep. It is impossible to sleep in the same room with any one who emits at regular intervals this hideous sound. The trick is said to be incurable, but a rubber cup worn on the teeth renders the grinding almost inaudible.

Nervous persons sometimes leap in their sleep a foot or more in the air, shaking the bed and the whole room. The man who gives eight or nine of these leaps in the course of the night soon becomes an intolerable bedfellow. Nerve tonics and exercise should be prescribed for him.

Nasal whistling is a habit less easy to cure than snoring. The sleeper keeps his mouth closed, but breathes with a distressing sound through his nose. The sound resembles a low whistle and, heard in the small hours, is guaranteed to madden.

Great Men Who Drank.

Cato was a hard drinker, while, in the language of one writer, old Ben Jonson was constantly "pickled." The poet Savage used to go on the hardest kinds of "tears," and Rogers observed, after seeing his own statue, "It is the first time I have seen him stand straight for many years." Byron says of Porson, the great classical scholar, "I can never recollect him except as drunk or bridal, and generally both." Keats was on a spree once that lasted six months. Horace, Plato, Aristophanes, Euripides, Alcæus, Socrates and Tasso of the old timers and Goethe, Schiller, Addison, Pitt, Fox, Blackstone, Fielding, Sterne and Steele were all hard drinkers at intervals.—London Times.

He Was Realistic.

A newly enrolled volunteer was rather alarmed during his first experience of a sham fight, especially as he heard the colonel in command declare that everything was to be done "the same as in actual warfare." No sooner was the first blank cartridge fired than the frightened soldier dropped his gun and took to his heels.

"Hey, why are you running away?" shouted his captain as the man dashed by him.

"It's all right, sir. I'm doing the same as I would do in actual warfare."—London Answers.

Jealousy.

The beautiful girl's sweet smiles changed to dark frowns.

"You deceiver!" she hissed. "I hate you!"

The young man dropped his cane in astonishment.

"Hate me?" he gasped. "Why, it was only yesterday you said you loved every hair on my head."

"Yes, but not every hair on your shoulder," she retorted as she held aloft a golden bit of evidence.

Softly Sentimental.

"Have you any new song that is soft and mellow?"

"Well, here's one that just came in. It's called 'I Love My Little Oozy Moozy Moo.' That sounds mushy, doesn't it?"

The London Child.

The London child's life is often very like a rabbit's—one long scurry from superior beings.—London Spectator.

Reason governs the wise man and seduces the fool.—From the Italian.

WHO SHE WAS

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF LYDIA E. PINKHAM

And a True Story of How the Vegetable Compound Had Its Birth and How the "Panic of '73" Caused It to be Offered for Public Sale in Drug Stores.

This remarkable woman, whose portrait appears above, was born in Lynn, Mass., February 9th, 1819. Her father, Mr. Isaac Mansfield, was a good old Quaker family, for many years the leading wholesale and retail grocer in Lynn. The maiden name of Mrs. Pinkham was Lydia Estes. She was educated in the common schools and Lynn Academy, and early showed a predilection for study, especially in the line of medicine. Her father, recognizing in her a bright, active mind, an earnest seeker after knowledge, and above all, possessed of a wonderfully sympathetic nature.

In 1843 she married Isaac Pinkham, a builder and real estate operator, and their early married life was marked by prosperity and happiness. They had four children, three sons and a daughter.

In those good old fashioned days it was common for mothers to make their own home medicines from roots and herbs; nature's own remedies—calling in a physician only in specially urgent cases. By tradition and experience many of the good housewives knew much of the curative properties of various roots and herbs.

Mrs. Pinkham took great interest in the study of roots and herbs, their characteristics and power over disease. She maintained that just as nature so bountifully provided in the harvest fields and orchards vegetable foods of all kinds; so, if we but take the pains to find them in the roots and herbs of the field there are remedies especially designed to cure the ills and weaknesses of the body, and it was her pleasure to search out the secret, and by means simple and effective, to relieve her own family and friends.

Of [illegible] was a rare combination of the choicest medicinal roots and herbs found in [illegible] Canada for the cure of the ills and weaknesses peculiar to the female sex, and Lydia E. Pinkham's friends and neighbors learned that her compound relieved and cured and it became quite popular among them.

All this [illegible] far was done freely, without money and without price as a labor of love.

But in 1873 the financial crisis struck Lynn. Its length and severity were too much for the large real estate interests of the Pinkham family, as this class of business suffered most from fearful depression, so when the Centennial year opened it found their property swept away. Some other source of income had to be found.

At this point Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was made known to the world.

The three sons and the daughter, with their mother, combined forces to restock the family fortune. They argued that the medicine which had relieved so many women [illegible] and [illegible] would be equally good for the women in the whole world.

For [illegible] had no money to put into [illegible] Their first [illegible] was the kitchen, where roots and herbs were stewed on the stove, gradually filling a dozen bottles. Then came the question of selling it. As [illegible] they had given it away freely. They hired a [illegible] printer to print some pamphlets setting forth the merits of the medicine, now called Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which [illegible] were then mailed by Mrs. Pinkham [illegible] to New York and Brooklyn.

The wonderful curative properties of the medicine were, in a great extent, self-advertising, for whenever used it was recommended to others, and the demand steadily increased.

In 1877, by combined efforts the family had saved enough money to commence newspaper advertising and for that time the growth and success of Lydia E. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound have become household words everywhere, and many tons of roots and herbs are used annually in its manufacture.

Lydia E. Pinkham's beneficial work lives to see the great success of this work. She passed to her reward years ago, but not till she had provided means for continuing her work as effectively as she could have done it herself.

During her long and eventful experience she was ever methodical in her work and she was always careful to preserve a record of every case that came to her attention. The case of every sick woman who applied to her for advice—and there were thousands—received careful study and the details, including symptoms, treatment and results were recorded for future reference, and to-day those records, together with hundreds of thousands made since, are available to sick women the world over, and represent a vast collaboration of information regarding the treatment of woman's life, which for authenticity and accuracy can hardly be equaled in any library in the world.

With Lydia E. Pinkham worked her daughter-in-law, the present Mrs. Pinkham. She was carefully instructed in all her husband's knowledge, and for years she assisted her in her vast correspondence.

To her hands naturally fell the direction of the work when its originator passed away. For nearly twenty-five years she has continued it, and nothing in the work shows when the first Lydia E. Pinkham dropped her pen, and the present Mrs. Pinkham, now the mother of a large family, took it up. With woman's intuition, some as capable as herself, the present Mrs. Pinkham continues this great work, and probably from the [illegible] no other person have so many women been advised how to regain health. Sick women, this advice is "Yours for Health" freely given if you only write to ask for it.

Such is the history of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; made from simple roots and herbs; the one great medicine for women's ailments, and the fitting monument to the noble woman whose name it bears.

LEAD GLASS.

The Processes by Which It Is Cut and Polished.

Designs to be followed by the cutter are first drawn on the "blank" or plain glass with whiting and water and then traced with red lead and turpentine. The first cutting is classed as "roughing" in the glass factory, when the glass is cut or ground out wherever there is a red line. The first cutting or roughing is with a soft steel disk on which there flows a small stream of water and very fine sand. The disk is in a lathe, and the glass is held by the hands of the cutter, and as his ability to [illegible] that glass and true position to the [illegible] bowl regards the quality of the work, etc.

[illegible] glass is ground [illegible] known as plain [illegible] glass, replacing or supplying the sand instead of shattering or breaking [illegible] bowl or [illegible].

From the grinding or first cutting the cutter takes the glass to the smoothing process, the same [illegible] cutting, [illegible] followed, [illegible] these [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] imported from England and the [illegible] of time spent in the [illegible] cutting being done with the latter. The polishing is done with wooden [illegible] faced [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] the glass [illegible] is put [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
