A GUARANTEED CURE

For Indigestion and Dyspepsia

There is no hesitation or quibbling about the claims which the Coleman Medicine Company make for their wonderful "Little Digesters". They come out straight with the statement that "Little Digesters" will positively cure even chronic Indigestion or Dyspepsia, as well as Heartburn and Sour Stomach.

They GUARANTEE "Little Digesters" to cure. If they fail, you get your money back, promptly and without question.

Of course they would not make such positive statements, or give such a guarantee, if they had not proved, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that "Little Digesters" WILL CURE.

"Little Digesters" do it simply and naturally, too, by helping out the weakened stomach—supplying just what it needs in the process of digestion, and enabling it to assimilate the food. Soon the whole system regains its vigor, and the stomach needs no further help.

"Little Digesters" are put up in little red boxes, sold for 25c by your druggist, or mailed by the Coleman Medicine Co., of Toronto.

Lives up to His Title.

"Now, Mr. Hampswell," said the city directory canvasser, "what is your business or occupation?"

"I am one of the busy bees in hive of industry," was the reply.

"Then you are a working man?" queried the directory man.

"No, I'm engaged in working men, and I call myself a busy bee because most people who come in contract with me get stung."

POETRY.

LOST IDEALS.

How one kinds fade away
From twilight into day,
As down the shady side of life
The gliding sea we ride!
The things that once we looked upon
As all the gold and pin,
The only object worth our while,
No longer catch our eye.

How seriously we longed to be
In childhood's happy day
The man who stood outside the tent
And took our change away!
But greater still had been our joy
Our pleasure more profound,
Could we have been the man inside
Who pushed the freaks around.

Then, growing older and a bit
Discerning in our likes,
Our hero was the pitcher then
Who put out men on strikes,
But quite above him in a glass
Resplendent, all alone,
The pugilist who held the belt
Like some bright planets shone.

And then the cashier in the bank
Who turned our checks to cash
And next the one in high finance
Who seemed to cut a dash:
The congressman, the governor,
Then for a time held sway,
But now in sliding down the hill
We watch them fade away.

TO-DAY'S STORY.

CUPID AND GHOSTS.

A Vacation in the Country That Didn't Effect a Cure.

By DONALD ALLEN.
[Copyright, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.]

It had been decided in family conclave to send Hilda to the country for the summer.

Hilda was not in a decline. Her appetite was good. What troubled her father and mother was to find that Hilda was in love.

John Wayne, her father, was a lawyer of note, and when the "case" was put into his hands by the mother he handled it like a lawyer. In this instance he constituted himself counsel, judge and jury, and the verdict was that Miss Hilda was to be packed off to the home of a maiden aunt in the country for three months.

The mother doubted, but the father was confident. Hilda had only reached the age of 18 when the girl says farewell to everything. After considering mostly of the father, settled things in half an hour. There is popular complaint about the law's delay, but there are times when it moves very swiftly.

Hilda was not told in so many words why she was packed off to summer with the geese and bumblebees and milkweeds, but she had her suspicions. She knew nothing whatever of law, but she at once set to work to beat the lawyer. Aunt Judith was grim and watchful and unsympathetic and held Cupid in contempt, and that was where her case was weak. Within a week of Hilda's arrival, by means of the towheaded boy on the next farm, the girl was receiving and sending letters.

The aunt had figured it out to herself that her niece would walk for about four weeks and that she would have to read her at least a dozen lectures. She was thus agreeably disappointed when Hilda did not balk.

Out in the orchard, under an apple tree, rested an old soap box. Twice a week the towheaded boy came stalking across the fields to leave letters under that box and take away those he found there. He was receiving 10 cents a letter, and he had a career before him. The soap box was not quite as romantic as a silver chest would have been, but it was a fairly safe postoffice.

By and by a letter told that Walter Allen would have his two weeks' vacation beginning at a certain date and that a certain event might be expected to happen. This letter was worth an extra dime to Hilda, and she conscientiously left the same under the box when she replied. She also went so often and was so cheerful in and out of the house that Aunt Judith held a conclave with herself and simultaneously announced to the audience that wasn't there:

"I have delivered only three lectures on the foolishness of calf love and the duty of children to their parents, but they have been sufficient to open the dear girl's eyes and make a different being of her."

An hour before dark one summer evening Hilda was asked if she wanted to carry a berry pie to a poor old woman living in a cottage half a mile down the road. Hilda did, and she was humming to herself as she set out. It was by this very road that within a day or two she might expect —. But she had to carry that berry pie very carefully and not expect too much.

Between her aunt's house and the old woman's was a deserted farmhouse standing close to the highway. Windows and doors were gone, the roof falling in and the yard grown up to weeds. The towheaded boy could have told Hilda that it was a haunted house and that ghosts had been seen trooping in and out.

One can't simply hand in a berry pie to a poor old woman and then rush away. She must be questioned about her rheumatism and other ailments and chewed up to live another twenty years. By the time the good Samaritan was ready to say goodby it was dark. She hadn't paid any attention to the sunset and the gathering clouds, and she had hardly gone ten rods when a big raindrop struck her cheek. She began to run, but the drops came faster and faster, and by the time she had reached the deserted house she was drenched and thought only of finding shelter until the worst of the storm was passed.

Hilda thought of ghosts as soon as she was under shelter, but, owing to the leaks in the roof, she had to move back until she was against the wall of what had been the kitchen proper. There she crouched and trembled and almost took part. If she was to become the right knew it.

Two ghosts there certainly roamed and then a ghost walked. Despite the noise of the downpour, Hilda heard that ghost plow its way through the tangled old bushes which hid from the door and enter. It stood itself like a wet dog. It creeped. The water from its soaked garments dripped on the dead. The kid had never disliked the ghost kindly. Take wet and dry, but now she smiled on everybody to every one that she was in the presence of a live ghost. She was speechless with terror until she heard the ghost softly inquiring in her direction in an agony from the leaks. Then she suddenly screamed out:

"Are you a ghost?"

"No. Are you?" came the reply.

"Then who are you?"

himself. When he wanted to give aid anonymously he said, "That's from the old man." Many gifts went out of his pocket under the signature of "The Old Man."

A young girl went to the business office of the great packing concern one day to report the illness of a friend who worked as a stenographer in the office. Mr. Armour happened in whilst her and overheard the girl's request for an advance in her friend's salary with which to pay the doctor's bill. Thrusting his thumb into his vest pocket—that pocket which seemed a mint of greenbacks—he handed the girl a roll of bills.

"Take that to your friend," he said, then adding to relieve the girl's astonishment, "Tell her the old man sent it."

Before the girl could thank him he was gone, but just as she left the building he again appeared and, finding her gone, hurried hatless into the street.

"Here, here! I forgot something," he called.

The girl turned back, and without a word Mr. Armour pressed something into her hand. She looked down. It was a twenty dollar bill.

Mr. Armour had decided that his gift was not sufficient and hastened to increase it.

The Laughter Cure.

It is all very well for a German doctor to prescribe hearty laughter as a remedy for nervous disease, but perhaps he will also be good enough to tell us where we are to get the ingredients for his prescription.

One cannot well sit down and laugh "till the tears run down the cheeks" at nothing at all, however anxious to cure a severe attack of neuralgia.

When one comes to think of it, few things make one laugh to this extent, and what is one person's meat where hilarity is concerned may prove no poisonous to another as to plunge him to the very depths of depression.

There are people who will double up with merriment when they see some one else fall down a flight of steps, and afterward describe it as "the funniest thing they ever saw," but most nervous patients probably would not laugh at all if in order to effect a cure an attempt were made to excite their hilarity by throwing relatives and servants down stairs. Nerve specialists who adopt the laughter cure will have either to practice clowning or keep trained fools to set their patients "in a roar."—Lady's Pictorial.

A LAKE THAT RAN AWAY.

It Changed Its Form at a Point in Northwest Vermont.

One hundred years ago the valley of Clyde, in Northwest Vermont, was densely wooded. A mill was located by a small stream was the center of the small county town of Derby, which, in turn, is near the village of Derby. From mountain ponds or lakes two or three miles square, are high up in the forest surrounding, and are among the most picturesque spots in New England.

On June 8, 1810, there was what on the night, or was it a little more, water could be set down to the mill. That continued some days, when, suddenly the watchman was awakened by a terrific roar, and the whole lake bear bodily from its bed. Frantically they questioned, "Who will save the miller and his wife?"

Spencer Chamberlain, the fastest of foot, ran as fast as possible through the tangle of thick woods to give warning, while the other man escaped to higher ground. He found the miller away and the miller's wife grinding at the mill. She became helpless with horror; but, breathless as her rescuer was from his flight, he succeeded in dragging and carrying her up the hill out of reach of the rushing water. The miller's horse was drowned and all of his hard earned property swept away in a twinkling.

The water rushed along, carrying everything before it, digging out ravines, filling up hollows and making a new surface to the land generally, some of it reaching Lake Memphremagog, more than a dozen miles away. It brought down so much sand that it filled the swamps and made them fit for habitation.

The site of the lake is now called Runaway pond or Dry pond and the road leading to it Runaway road. The ground which was once the bed of the lake is spongy and shakes when walked upon. Hay is grown there, but has to be cut by hand and carried off on pitchforks, as a horse would sink into the soggy mass.

TIDES OF PUGET SOUND.

The Swift and Turbulent Waters of the Narrows.

The waters of the narrows are treacherous. It is a place of terrible tides. Viewed from the precipitous shores, the surging waters are magnificent. The scene has been compared with the Hudson above New York city. The waters of that part of Puget sound which extends to Olympia, Mud bay, Shelton and Henderson bay, a vast inland sea within itself, all flow in and out of the narrows.

In the upper reaches of the sound some twenty-five or thirty miles from the narrows the tides attain a height of more than twenty feet. When the tides begin to fall all the accumulated water rushes out through the narrows like a great river at flood. In like manner when the tide sets in the direction of Olympia the narrows become a [illegible] current. [illegible] suggests great and wreak [illegible] way under the strain. This being so, it is no wonder that [illegible] craft often overturn in the narrows. A whirlpool has been known to seize a rowboat and twist it round and round until the rowers almost despaired of coming out alive. It is a marvelously beautiful water with all its terrors, and hundreds and thousands will continue to find pleasure there, notwithstanding its occasional tragedies. The rumble of the tides when running at full is like the distant rumble of the ocean. The terrors of the sea are an element of its charm, and so it is with the terrors of the narrows.—Tacoma Ledger.

Two Apologies For a Hat.

A Kansas City man who had lost his hat at a public function in that metropolis caused the following unique advertisement to be published in the local papers:

The undersigned will deem it a great favor if the gentleman who inadvertently took the undersigned's new silk hat on the occasion of the reception of the Lotos club, leaving an inferior handpiece instead, will have the goodness to return said silk hat. Not only will the gentleman receive the undersigned's warmest thanks for his kindness, but the apologies of the undersigned—the apology for the trouble the undersigned may have caused him and "the mystery for a hat" which he has conferred upon the undersigned.

All Affected.

Spriggs went to a noted physician to ask advice as to his health. In pompous tones he addressed the doctor:

"I—ah—have come to—ah—ask you—ah—what—what is—ah—the dooced matter with me—ah?"

"I find your heart is affected," said the physician gravely.

"Oh—ah—anything else—ah?"

"Yes; your lungs are affected too."

"Anything—ah—else—ah?"

"Yes; your manners are also affected."—London Answers.

Hypothetical Questions.

"What will your mother say to you when you get home?" said one boy.

"She'll start in by asking me some hypothetical questions," answered precocious Willie.

"What are they?"

"Questions that she thinks she knows the answers to before she starts to talk."—Washington Star.

Archness.

Sally Gay—What a cunning little fellow Mr. Calipers is! Dolly Swift—Cunning? Why, he's dreadfully bowlegged. Sally Gay—Yes, but that gives him such an arch look, you know.—Truth.

East India Company.

The British territory in India was acquired by the East India company by conquest or treaty in the course of 100 years, dating from the battle of Plassey (1757).

Popular Representation.

The earliest instance of popular representation in Europe occurred at Barcos, Spain, in 1300. While the inhabitants of the great towns in other parts of Europe were languishing in feudal servitude, in many of the Spanish cities the citizens lived under the protection of their own laws and magistrates, were in war time commanded by officers of their own selection and were in the full enjoyment of all the essential rights of freemen.
