Lost and Found

Story of a Bridegroom With Dramatic Taste.
By CLARISSA MACKIE

When Robert Dwight married Mildred Corson every one said that they would be happy if Dwight did not go on the stage...

After the manner of a bride, Mildred looked from her hotel window into a summer land of tropical beauty...

Robert had come out to buy some cigars at a corner little tobacco shop
at the end of a crooked street...

Robert had come over an hour, and the mistress was waiting below...

Robert in the morning picture. Why,
how did it happen?

"Yes," said Mildred absently, "but she was married before that."

"What was married before?" asked Corson, looking at her.

"You remember I told you I always acted in our college theatricals?" he repeated, "and many of my friends
had urged me to enter the profession."
