"He seemed to be doing the listening,"

Duckworth gives 20 years.

Twenty years in Kingston Penitentiary was the sentence imposed at the assizes at Orangeville last week, by Chief Justice Falconbridge on Thomas Duckworth, who pleaded guilty to manslaughter in connection with the death of his brother-in-law, Harry Stiles, near Grand Valley, Nov. 2 last. W. G. McWhirter, K.C., representing the crown, and G. H. McKittrick, K.C., the defense.

Chief Justice Falconbridge briefly reviewed the case. The crown had the responsibility of accepting a plea for manslaughter. The court agreed with the course adopted by the crown. The plea of manslaughter admitted the killing. The sentence was then pronounced. The prisoner is thirty years old and expected a much less extended term.

An Interesting Decision.

Judge Marsh at the regular weekly session of the Ninth Division Court at Hamilton disposed of a case of unusual interest.

This was an action brought by G. A. McLean, a farmer, who resides near Franklin, against D. F. Smith, Woodworth Street south of this city, for $600 as compensation for the loss of a cow.

The plaintiff alleged that the cow died of an infection of the animal's udder.

The plaintiff stated that the cow was a good milker and could not be replaced for one hundred dollars.

"That cow deliberately committed suicide," declared the defendant, "the boy struck the cow with a stick when it was approaching and the cow deliberately turned and plunged straight right into the front of the stick."

After a trial of two hours, the judge of common knowledge that cattle while grazing along the public highway are liable to be struck in front of passing vehicles, and careful drivers are always on the watch for such action," said Judge Monk after hearing the evidence. "If the plaintiff had produced the boy, who is claimed, struck the cow and had shown that it was in charge of him, he would have been entitled to damages, but the evidence does not prove any person to have been in charge of the animal and I therefore dismiss the case."

PUBLISHERS FACE CRITICAL SITUATION.
