What a Kiss Cost

Persons Long Ago

By F. A. MITCHEL

My granddaughter Marian was my generation. What was the cause of my feeling for lar is hard to specify. She was Marian Whitlock, and there was but one Marian Whitlock. It was not that she was a strong character, for she was not. She was not only beedloos, but blind to the result of her boodlessness. But she was lovable. Indeed, she was loved through her faults rather than her good qualities. At least I, her grandmother, loved her on Marian used to tell ber grandmother more about what was going on between her and her young men amoclates than any one clas. Why she did this I don't know unless it was because I realised and therefore sympathized with the conditions under which she labored. Candor compels me to admit that she possessed traits which had shows themselves in me when I was her age, and it is more than probable that she inherited them from me. While I endeavored to guide her out of the offects of her ludiscretions I never lectured ber for having been indiscreet. I realised that indiscretion was a trait born in her and was not likely to be eradicated till she had grown beyond the age when it would lead her into bearted way with her perplexties, but one day she gave evidence that what the had to tell was of a serious nature. "Grandma," she said, "I have gone "What is it, child" I usked.

You know Elliot Walker?" "Well, Ellot and I were in the muno room. I at the plane, he turning prer the abeets." She paused. I gave her time. "Elliot bent lower and lower over my shoulder. I suppose I should have moved, but I didn't." "He klased me." I refrained from comment on this and waited for the denouement. "I don't know what it was that prompted me to act as I did. I was certainly not offended. I had expected when I didn't move that he would kine me and should not have thought much of him if be hadn't. It was not that I was prudish; it was-well, I don't know what it was, unless it was Old Nick got into me. But I arose from the plane, looked daggers at him and, turning, maried to leave the room. What was my surprise to see Herbert Kenworthy standing in the door of the music room. Elliot and I had not been aware of his approach, and he had seen the whole performance."

"What did you do next?" I saked anxiously.

"Why, you see, I couldn't very well say that I had encouraged Elliot to ties too, could IY' "Go ou." "And I couldn't may that I was no really offeuded."

"What did you dor" "Why, I went on out of the room." "And didn't go back?" "Yes, after a few minutes."
"And what did you say?" "Nothing about what had happened began to chat with Herbert, while Elliot sat looking very much ember-"Ob. All this dashed through my brain, and I said "Did your two visitors show any sulmosity toward each other?" "None whatever. But, grandme, have beard since that which leads me to fear'-"What"

"I have been told that this morning they were playing billiards together at the club and Elliot charged liethert with shoving up points that he had not made. Herbert called Elilot a lier, and Elilot struck him. I did not ask to hour any more. know well that the young men would not play billiards together after what bad occurred except for a parpose, that Durpose being to make it uppear that a different cause from the real one had moulted in an animosity which would doubless lead to a dout the object being to keep Marian's name from being involved in the affair. What thre you beard since " I ask

d enviously of Marian. "Nothing." I doubted if Marien foresaw what would be the probable result of all this, and I dreaded to tell her. Nevertheless if she did not prevent a meet ing between these two young men and one of these killed the other, she being responsible for the act, her life would Marian, paling. "A duel will surely follow. Marian looked at me with a frightened expression that excited my pity, but I knew that it was no time to indulge in anything but action. I impressed upon her the necessity of her preventing any further trouble between ber two suitors. During our conversation it came out that she had tween ber two sultors. During

she revealed to me, though I was the only person she confided it to. The loved Elliot Walker. Thinking she needed my support, I told her that I would go with her to see Herbert Kenworthy. She made no reply for awhile to this proposition. I could see that a struggle was going on within ber, but I was ignorant as to just what it was. Presently she rose. "What are you going to do?" I asked. "I am going to see Herbert" "Do you wish me to go with you?" "No, grandma." This was the first indication of strength I saw in her, and it was some relief, She left me, and later I beard her pony phaston on the gravel walk-When she came I saw by the exprestion on her face that she had not suoreeded in her object. "Well?" I said interrogatively. "I went to Herbert's bouse," she said, "called him out and we had a conference on the verside. I told him I had beard that be and Elliot had had au altercation. I inferred that he had seen Elliot kiss me and me recent the act. I begged that he would not constitute himself my defender. He replied that he had not done so, but admitted that he and Elliot had got into a quarrel from words that had passed between them relative to Elliot's act I then admitted that I had encouraged Elllot to kiss me. "He looked very much surprised and palued at this. I knew that his contempt had passed from Elliot to me. I told him that since I had exonerated Etilot I should expect him to spologise to Killot for anything be might have said under a misunderstanding. After some thought be told me that any woman in such a case, to prevent trouble between two of her men friends, would assume the blame. There was no sin in my doing so. The affair had gone too far to be smoothed over. I argued nothing out of him. Then I came struck him. Elliot spologized to me bumbly for having klesed me. He admitted that the scene in the billiard room had been conrected to keep my name out of the quarrel. He would gladly on my account put a stop to it, but could not refuse a challenge with out being disgraced." "And as the matter stands the two men will meet tomorrow morning?" "I suppose so."

The case was a knotty one. The only way I could bee out of it was for Marian to choose between the two men. She might tolt Herbert that she loved Elliot, but I doubted if this would prevent a meeting that had become a pub He matter and with which she was not known to be connected. It would probably save killet from injury, but this would not be fair to Horbert. "The only hope I see to prevent this meeting, Marian," I said, putting my arms about her, "is to tell them both that you love Elliot. That would, think, dispose of the matter. Harbert would withdraw his challenge." I could feel her shiver in my arms at this alternative, but she said nothliot had made her no proposal. The day was now ended, and nothing had been accomplished. I determined to leave Marian free to act for berself till the last minute; then if she did not act I would endeavor to force her to do so. We remained in the disrobing. After 12 o'clock I fell neleep on a lounge. I was aroused at dawn by Marian. "Come," she said. Without asking her where we were o so I went with ber. I knew. She know where the meeting would take place, and we proceeded there. Since killet had not proposed to her I could not see what she would do. We wait ed au hour a short distance from the ield and finally saw one party come on to it, then the other. The seconds were engaged at the preliminaries whon - Marian advanced. I following

There was no reply from either. Marian asked all to withdraw except he principals. "I can think of only one way to

The organisation of resources received to-day a report from the Y.M.C.A. Boy Secretaries, who have been appealing for the committee to the high reheal boys to enter farm service. They report that 118 collegiate institutes, high schools, business colleges, continuation schools and normal schools were visited and the appeal made to enlist older boys for service on the farm. Also mayors, presidents of the boards of trade, and in fact every leading citizen agreed to give this committee their hearty and earnest co-operation.

Seventy-five per cent. of the boys who were present at these meetings signified their intention to devote their time and their intention to devote their time and energy to more food production; 2,683 is the estimated total of those already estimated, which constitutes 25 per cent. of the enrolment of the echoole visited. Two noteworthy features were brought out in the campaign. First, that many of the boys had already arranged for their own employment; and, according that the girls were just as earnest to do their chart to bely the came.
