CITY OF THE FUTURE.

Vision of the Change That May Come Through the Motorcar.

Regulation of traffic was practically unknown before 1900, but the motorcar came into use, drivers enough to travel eight miles an hour truck and the twenty-mile-an-hour pleasure car could justifiably run. Now the speed limit has passed twenty. Not the fastest, but the slowest vehicle determines the speed of a congested street's traffic. This conclusion then is justified: In the city of the future there will be separate streets for the pleasure driver, the fast pleasure car, and still another for the heavier, slower truck.

Moreover, trucks are increasing in weight so that ordinary pavements cannot support the heavier loads they will bear. It is evident that the city must provide a type of street that can support these trucks and for pleasure drivers, too.

New York, Philadelphia, Boston, London, Paris, and other cities have always provided elevated structures to hold transit railways. For very much the same reason that confronts us now with the increasing number of the motorcar, and we expect that motor traffic will increase as it has increased the congested city of the future. There are strains enough to show that this is the tendency of thoughtful municipal engineers.

It becomes next to prove that the city must provide a type of street which will provide highway for the heavy motor trucks deep in the ground. Swift passenger motors will speed along in the sunshine unobstructed and undelayed by the city of the future, the city that the "motorist" will bring into being, will be pleasantly different from that compact aggregation of towering office buildings and dingy houses built by robbing the earth. All will be open, sunny city, six or eight miles from its cosmopolitan center; its suburbs, if suburbs they can be called, sixty or a hundred miles distant and easily reached by train twelve hours fast enough to convey us to our work. There will be no slums in that motor city, for slums are created by high land value, which cannot be lessened by the location of the building, and the cost of the land building included, will be satisfied. That follows from the more equitable distribution of wealth which, however, will bring about a man may journey from his house to his office or to a distant railway station.

And with that chance there will be increased the craving for the open air, for trees and flowers, for sunlight and moonlight, for outdoor games and the full enjoyment of nature. Out in the heart of the city the man will be in a position in addition to trains and motor trucks, the remainder of life we now know.

One of the first signs of the approaching summer vacation is the desire to get away from work, rest, and relaxation.

Everyone who can afford to do so will finally reach the constituted city parkways of the present.—Wallmar Kampfert in McClure's Magazine.

Spares Your Eyes.

The summer vacation is often a disappointment to persons who are obliged to overuse their eyes throughout the working year and who depend on their vacation for a chance to rest their eyes. They are not the ones that do strongest, but the ones that they do not use the trouble to look after their eyes and give them a vacation too. The glare from the water or from the hot sun, long dusty journeys, automobile driving, flying, heat, cold, wind, only give the eyes a change of work, not rest. Every summer "comfort kit" should include dark glasses, some simple eye drops and a dropper and remember, if you can, not to be while you're in a hammock.—Yonkers Citizen.

The Man at the Top.

A general rule is that the man at the top is the man who "had everything at his fingers' ends." Long hours, hard labor, the mastery of business detail—that did the trick. To-day big business asks something else, and that something is hard labor. And this is the secret of fact, a knowledge of mass that amounts to genius—this, often as much as industry, has come to be the distinguishing mark of the man at the top.

Obedient Orders.

She was a green girl just landed from the old country, and it was her first day at home. Her mother had just come down to dinner the latter said, "Oh, Mary, bring the cayenne, please." Oh Mary went down both of them.

Then—she used to have a birthday party every year, with a cake with candles in it, you know.

But she doesn't have now?

"No," said the girl, "she's up. She thought the candles threw too much light on her age."—Yonkers Statesman.

Interested.

"Is your boy John interested in his studies?"

"Yes," replied Farmer Cortosio.

"Every once in awhile he picks up a book and says he knows what it's all about!"—Washington Star.

Suspicious.

Tom—I wonder why there broke out from the old country, and it was her first day at home. Her mother had just come down to dinner the latter said, "Oh, Mary, bring the cayenne, please." Oh Mary went down both of them.
