THE GEORGETOWN HERALD

WEDNESDAY EVE'G, SEPT. 5, 1917

IF I KNEW

If I knew the box where the smiles are kept,
No matter how large the key,
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard
'Twould open, I know, for me.
Then, over the land and sea broadcast
I'd scatter the smiles to play,
That the children's faces might hold them fast
For many and many a day
If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet,
I would try and to gather them everypeh,
From nursery, school and street.
Then folding and holding I'd pack them in
And turn the monster key;
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depths of the deep, deep sea.

A POOR LOT

There's this here thing occurs to me, perhaps it does to you, that folks what's living nowadays need much attending to. They're gettin' soft and spoogy like, as hot house plants have done, not like the things that stand the rain, likewise the frost and sun. When youngsters get a little scratch it almost makes me cuss to see the fools a scamperin' round and kickin' up a fuss. Then rush to get some liniment, they dash to get some dope, you'd think, by heck that they had quit a-havin' any hope. They squirt peroxide on the scratch, to scare the germs away, they say they've always hangin' round, in either night or day. And then they have to dress the thing and keep the youngster quiet, to open up your face and laugh would almost start a riot. And if a bee should come along and kick the little dear, they almost throw a spasm then, get paralyzed with fear, and put on fifteen kinds of oil and fourteen kinds of grease, to loosen up that little sting and bring the ducky peace. These things, my friend, they rile my soul, they cause my wrath to stay, and make me long for folks to act like what they need to do. They used to wander in the fields and pick a bunch of herbs, what didn't have high soundin' names like unto Latin verbs. They'd smash 'em in a little dish and roll 'em into pills, and chase away the sickness then and scare away the chills. Why, good lands sakes, don't I remind how youngsters used to feel, when they was limpin' 'long the road with stone bruise on the heel, and how they used to operate in ways that didn't fail, by proddin' with an old jack knife, or else a horse shoe nail. Ah shucks, this generation's fast skiddin' down the hill, and all folks think about is just on gettin' ill. By gum, I'm raisin' up my voice and tryin' to make a kick, for folks what's livin' nowadays, they sort of made me sick.

LOST BY TIMIDITY.

An Early British Naval Failure at the Dardanelles.

GOT HIS FLEET INTO A TRAP.

Admiral Duckworth Could Have Wasted He Acted Promptly, but He Hesitated, Gave the Turks Time to Arm and Was Bombarded Back to the Sea.

The unsuccessful campaign at Gallipoli when the forces of the allied powers failed in their attempt to reach Constantinople after Turkey had arrayed herself on the side of Germany recalls the time when Sir John Duckworth sailed through the Dardanelles and then turned round and sailed out again. It was in 1807, when Napoleon was at war with more than half a world and when England had on the throne a king with an infirm brain and a ministry called that of "all the talents," which in spite of its name was wretchedly inefficient.

The French were trying to come to an understanding with the irresolute Sultan Selim, which was greatly disquieting to the czar since in view of the great victories of the "Little Corporal" in Prussia he could ill afford to spare any forces from the Russian frontier. So he asked the British to send a fleet to the sublime porte and compel Selim to make terms with Russia and England.

Accordingly Sir John Duckworth was ordered to join Admiral Louis in the Aegean sea and lead the combined fleets up the Dardanelles to the Turkish capital, where, after securing the safety of Mr. Arbuthnot, the British ambassador, he was to dictate terms to the sultan.

It is harder to sail up the Dardanelles than to sail out because there is a powerful current that flows constantly from the Black sea to the Aegean. There were no great steam cruisers then, and Sir John had to wait several days for favorable conditions. Meantime one of the largest of the ships, the Ajax, carrying seventy-four guns, unaccountably blew up, and some 250 Englishmen were killed.

On a February morning in 1807, however, seven battleships sailed into the mouth of the ancient Hellespont and bore their way up the strait. They encountered only a light and ineffectual fire from the forts. There was no effective preparation for defensive action on either the European or Asiatic side from the mouth of the Dardanelles to the city of Constantine.

Had Sir John given the sultan a twenty-four hour ultimatum and trained his guns on the citadel he need not have fired a shot. He would have accomplished the purpose for which he had come and could have sailed out with his ships unharmed and himself covered with glory. But he was seized with timidity and began unaccountably to negotiate and temporize.

General Sebastiani, the clever agent of Napoleon at the sultan's court, encouraged Duckworth's irresolution and led him on from day to day with specious promises.

Meanwhile men, women and children, Christians and Mohammedans, were working day and night to erect suitable defenses along the famous waterway, until in no place from the whole shore, as well as the forts of the Dardanelles, was bristling with guns. Duckworth's opportunity had passed. He had made the fatal mistake of giving the Turks time to find their leader.

For two weeks the parleyings went on, while the fleet's officers through their glasses could see the constant arrival of cannon, ammunition and troops. At last Sir John awoke to the fact that he was in a trap and had barely time to get out. Fortunately the wind was in his favor, and the seven battleships began their ignominious retreat.

What a contrast between the coming in and the going out!

For sixty miles they ran the gantlet of a continual and heavy fire. It was incessant and galling in the sea of Marmora, and in the Dardanelles it was terrific. There stone balls, weighing 700 and 800 pounds, snapped the rigging, broke down the masts and crushed in the decks. The roll of the artillery was deafening, and the smoke hung over everything in dark, impenetrable folds.

The humiliated admiral could do nothing but run, and as the current was with him he finally reached the Aegean sea, although with a badly battered fleet.

It has always seemed curious to the reader of history that Duckworth escaped the fate of Admiral Byng, who was court martialed and shot fifty years before for just such another lamentable error of judgment. The only explanation appears to be that this was a time of such multiplied fears and panics that even so serious a matter as this was soon forgotten in the more absorbing and importunate problem of national defense against the designs of Napoleon.—Youth's Companion.

Cleopatra.

Cleopatra means "fame of her father." It was once very common among the royal ladies of Egypt and Greece and survives in the French Cleo. Cleopatra was born in Alexandria 50 B. C. and died at the age of thirty-nine not by applying a poisonous asp to her breast, but by swallowing some secret poisoning.

Life, upon the whole, is far more pleasurable than painful; otherwise we would not feel pain so impatiently when it comes.—Leigh Hunt.
