WINNER OR WASTER—Which are You?
ON a recent public occasion the Honorable the Minister of Finance for Canada, in addressing a representative Canadian audience, dealt with the urgency of everybody doing, even in the smallest way, their share towards aiding the Empire.
It is well to remember that every dollar thrown away gratuitously does one hundred per cent. more good to the enemy than one dollar saved by ourselves.
The wealth of the world finally flows through individual dollars, and if the curse of extravagance strikes deeply enough, our ruin is bound to follow.
Save a dollar TO-DAY and do a hundred per cent. more for the Empire than your extravagant neighbor does for the enemy.

YOU'RE DRAFTED

Let joy triumphant fill your heart,
You're drafted; proudly your part
For home and country, truth and right,
Against the ruthless tyrant's might,
Go bravely! Do your duty clear,
Be glad and answer with a cheer.
You're drafted,
For God and liberty you go
To fight against their basest foe,
For manly's most sacred law,
He violate. Awake! The cause
Of justice claims you. Do not fear,
But answer with a ringing cheer.
You're drafted,
Of freedom get a vision now;
Of duty get the largest view.
With your names with fervid glow,
For freedom, honor, and life go,
Save all that noble man hold dear,
Let your heart's echo be a cheer.
You're drafted,
Dangerous relief you've
Your manhood prove. Be strong and true,
Fail not to '68 and rise be just,
Your country trusts, accept its trust.
With faith and hope its loud call hear,
You're no coward heart's no cheer.
You're drafted,

To-Day's Story

STUDENT HELP

By Jane Osborn
(Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Urula had watched the principal guest of the evening with interest. It was the new instructor of psychology, Jerrold Greig, who was being considered for the vacancy in Professor Judson's department at Brompton college. He had come from one of the largest Eastern colleges and brought with him, and very obviously showed in his manner and bearing, more of urbanity than was possessed by most members of the Brompton college faculty. At the head of the table sat Professor Judson, and at the other end Mrs. Judson presiding over the tea-tray. For Brompton was a small town, and the evening meal, and had the tea service spread before the mistress of the house in an stately array as the meat platters were being removed. The rule of etiquette that directed the hostess to seat her man guest of honor at the host's right apparently did not trouble the Judsons, for Mr. Jerrold Greig sat where it was most convenient for him, and Mrs. Judson's eldest sister—for this sister, who, in the event that Mr. Greig received the appointment, would be the hostess of the household, had come with him—sat at Mrs. Judson's left. Grandfather and grandmother Judson had their usual places on the other side of the table, and Rodney Judson, Professor Judson's oldest son, who had but recently graduated from Brompton, sat between the young aspirant and his sister.

So there were a good many dishes for one small pair of hands to wash unaided and a good many pots and pans had to be used in preparation for the meal, and in Mrs. Judson's household no pots and pans, however stubbornly they had resisted the first abatements, were ever left to soak till the next day.

So Urula was still at her work when the clock on the kitchen shelf pointed to nine o'clock. She heard a creaking sound towards the back stairs, and she saw the light of the solitary oil lamp shed a mere far-reaching glow. Then a door distinctly opened. Yes, it was the back stairs door, and a man's figure that was neither that of Professor Judson nor his son came out of the shadow. It was the young Eastern professor, and he stepped toward Urula with a deprecating look upon his face that was not very good keeping with the appearance of perfect self-possession and poise that he had shown at dinner. "I'm sorry," he said, "but I've just remembered when we were youngsters the glass was broken and I had to have it replaced. I'll be glad to have you do it for me." Urula moved toward the tray, where stood a neat array of perfectly shining glasses, and took one.

"Too bad to have to use a clean one," objected the professor. "I remember when we were youngsters the glass was broken and I had to have it replaced. I'll be glad to have you do it for me." Urula moved toward the tray, where stood a neat array of perfectly shining glasses, and took one.

"But, then, that cook was very cross," said the man, trying to make his voice sound perfectly self-possessed, but not succeeding, "and this cook isn't cross, is she?"

Still Urula made no comment. Jerrold Greig drank the water, for which he had no time, and then watched Urula intently as she continued her task at the sink.

"I used to help the cook of ours dry dishes," he prevented, "and I don't see why I shouldn't help you. Every day has gone to bed and I am supposed to be in my room—but I will know." He had taken a towel from the rack and had begun to dry one of the pans that Urula had just washed. "Do you know," he ventured, encouraged because Urula had not replied his effort at helplessness, "do you know,

Prisoner's Personal Parcels

Scheme for Prisoners of War other than Officers Interred Abroad
The British War Office has issued a scheme for the forwarding of personal parcels to prisoners of war other than officers interred abroad. The parcels may be sent to the prisoners of war in Canada, and the parcels may be sent to the prisoners of war in Canada, and the parcels may be sent to the prisoners of war in Canada.

Hoarding
Hoarding is one of the new words of the war. It means the hoarding of requirements, especially of food and fuel just at present. Now, saving and laying up a prudent supply for the winter is a crime in peace times; but the man or woman who hoards fuel, coal, or anything else today to store up for the winter would be a criminal in the eyes of the law.
