Military News

Gunner Ernest Manning, son of Mr and Mrs S. Manning, 124th line Plympton, arrived home on Monday evening from overseas, being discharged from further military service, owing to a wound received in his left arm. He was met at the station by a large delegation of citizens, highly decorated into which, headed by the Excelsior Band, formed a procession and escorted him returned here to the town hall. An address of welcome was tendered him by Mayor Hair, to which he responded in an able manner, stating that he was glad to be back in Forest, once again, and that it was something he had looked forward to for the past year-and-a-half. Gunner Manning has been overseas for over two years, and received the wound in his arm, which has caused his return home, about 18 months ago. He expects to return to the hospital at either Guelph or London, in a couple of weeks for further treatment. - Forest Standard.

CHARLES H. GRANTY, treasurer of the New York Times, in a cable to his newspaper, says that "of all the troops in the allied lines the Boche most dreads the Canadians."

GEORGE R. PATULLO, in the Saturday Evening Post, wrote that while there were British regiments that could not be surpassed anywhere, yet he believed it to be the opinion of experts that the Canadian corps was "the most formidable weapon of its size on any front."

There are some who consider to quite bad form to speak highly of the work of our own army. They deplore all such talk. But between offensive boasting and spiritless humility there is plenty of middle ground. The army leaders of the Canadians discourage every tendency towards boastfulness of speech but at the same time they make strong appeals to the spirit and self-confidence of the fighting forces. Here at home the Canadian people have every right to admire the splendid showing made by the men of Canada in the war.
