THE SONG OF AN OPTIMIST
Did it ever once possess you
As you walk the path of life
That no matter what begets you
In this world of toil and strife
There are others just as bad
If even not worse of than you
And though you suffer hardship
Others suffer harder than you
Learn to take things in their stride
This world is not so bad
You will never "blow the lid off things"
That you never had.
Though I had and ought to have you,
Why, just look at me, and Smile.
For this thing of being downcast
Is not worth the while.
See, if you think you're out of luck
Just look at my boy and girl.
Dimple, dull, and dumpy,
And they're just as well as I.
A bright child, through life's anxiety,
See your little son would beaming,
That the world smiles with the
And the griever grieves alone.

The Newcomer
By LINCOLN ROTHBLUM
Copyright, 1918, by the Lincoln Rothblum
Behind every blind or feeble-minded person in the face of the sun after-noon sun, lingered eager eyes straining to see all that was to be seen in the new world, and in the new world's household. Morning in Maple Square. It was not understood, was an event. With the exception of the Senter, who had left late last night and had not yet returned, the household was in a state of confusion. Mrs. Gregory, who had been a teacher, came to turn Maple Square into a workshop. The girl, who had been a student, was now a teacher. The girl, who had been a student, was now a teacher. The girl, who had been a student, was now a teacher.

OLD BUGGY NOT SO BAD
Speaking of old-fashioned things, a newspaper writer wanted to know what has become of the gallant youth who, when he had stopped the horse, would get down the top of the buggy in order to permit his sweetheart to alight without difficulty.
Well, we do not know what has become of him, but we remember him. Perhaps he is slumbering somewhere in oblivion, wherever that is, with the gaily lap robe wound about him that lap robe with the big red rose curiously worked in the center. It was a thing of art, even as the linen duster, and the gallant youth probably hangs on to it in his obscurity.
But, speaking of heavy riding, the automobile is no improvement over it in the matter of real enjoyment. Not until the automobile is perfected so it can be driven with one hand, or until it will wander along the road without driving at all, will it come in the class of bliss which the buggy occupied in the days gone by.
The girl, as an sweet as they used to be, and the roads much better. The moonlight is just as mellow. Love flows in the same unchartered channel. Youth is as hopeful—and as beautiful. Mothers are as anxious, fathers as impatient, when their daughter falls in love when she was expected. Gossip is as busy. But the wise old horse that knew when there was a loving couple in the buggy, and the sure heavy lap robe, have all but taken their departure from the world with the gallant fellow who slumbered in the rig and stately and dignified, and the gallant fellow who slumbered in the rig and stately and dignified, and the gallant fellow who slumbered in the rig and stately and dignified.

AMERICAN IS NOT SONGSTER
The last quarter of a century the general feeling has spread abroad that America was quite musical nation and it is true that in the large cities of the eastern seaboard and quite far into the middle West there is a good deal of talent to make in the form of operas and concertos; when for the most part, by imported musicians; but when we reach the great heart of the country we find that the natural instincts of the people are almost entirely stunted, or at any rate, very poorly furnished. For musical nation is not one which merely listens to music made by others, any more than a people is a political one, instead of exercising themselves, they watch others exercise in gymnastics.
The most interesting feature of the musical life of the country is the fact that the natural instincts of the people are almost entirely stunted, or at any rate, very poorly furnished. For musical nation is not one which merely listens to music made by others, any more than a people is a political one, instead of exercising themselves, they watch others exercise in gymnastics.
