Lachesis

By R. BAY BAKER

Things happen just by accident Sometimes. But does the accident happen by accident? Not while Lachesis is building down that destiny job on Mount Olympus.

Lachesis, you know, is one of the three Moerae who meddle in the affairs of mortals from the time they are born until they pass into other realms. Three Moerae, or Fates, have a room all to themselves in the big ofice building of the gods, and they run that with a high hand.

One would think that in these days of progress, Clotho would get something to take the place of that old spinning wheel on which she spins the thread of life, and that Atropos could find an instrument less unwieldy than that long pair of dull shears she has been using to cut the thread when she decides it's long enough.
However, they seem to have got along so far without modern improvements and they ought to know their business by this time.

Anyhow, this story concerns Lachesis, who works without instruments.
She simply stands near the spinning wheel and dabs-weed and wees on that thread and twists it about her fingers and ties knots in it, to suit her own pleasure. It has been said that Clotho and Lachesis and Atropos are old and ugly. Of course, as mortals reckon, these fates are old, but years don't count on Olympus. And as to ugliness —well, I'm willing to allow that Atropos has a hideous face, and it's possible Clotho is not beautiful, because her back must be jagged and her eyes faded and her forehead wrinkled from bending over the spinning wheel; but Lachesis—there's no reason why she should be ugly, because her job furnishes lots of variety. Moreover, she's one of the heroines in this story, so she has just got to be beautiful.

The hero is Jack Watson, a mere mortal who defied Lachesis in the "small talk" that usually develops between a nurse and a convalescing patient; but as he was one who took things for granted, he was not a business contract, especially concerning the affairs of women, he had not even asked the customary "Where is your home?" before he got to work on his contract.
He had not been in the hospital for long, but he had been in the hospital for nearly three years of training, preceded the possibility of his personal matters; so the fact that they had not been schoolmates and "puppy-love" sweethearts remained unveiled.

He fought against the peculiar feeling that was creeping over him, but it was a losing fight. He gave up the struggle and confessed, first to himself and later to her, that he was in love with her. He had not thought of it on the day he was to leave the hospital.
"Do you believe in love?" she inquired, as she stood beside the bed and watched him as he made a decision sufficiently to keep him from seizing her hand. "These days, people are beginning to have the idea that marriage is only a business contract." Jack laughed and forgot all about Melbourne and real estate, business club dinners and hermits' lives.
"Love?" she echoed. "Surely, I believe in love. Every one was made for some one, and I was made for you. I've felt that ever since I first saw you standing by this bed and counting my sweat-drops. Haven't you felt the same way?"

She forgot about "being professional" and her hand found its way into his.

"Perhaps," she confessed, "that's what we always read in books; and there may be something to it. Really, I feel as if I had known you always."
Lachesis smiled a smile of triumph.
She drew the two threads together and held them side by side in one hand.
With the other hand she reached into the happiness box and dabbed some of the contents on the threads. Then she carefully and methodically knotted them together.

You can't defy Lachesis and get away with it.

THE MARRIAGE BIRDS

The smallest and most brilliant in color of all the three crelousers are found in the humming-birds of London. The maximum shade temperature is 68 degrees Fahrenheit, while the minimum is 50 degrees. Cholera, yellow fever and other tropical diseases occur from time to time, but on the whole the country is not unhealthy, in comparison with the West Indies or the Central American countries.
The dry season lasts from the middle of February to the middle of May, but in the middle of May, and almost continuously during October, November and December. The annual rainfall averages about 81 1/2 inches, but rises to some parts of the country to 150 inches or more. Entirely sea winds prevail during the greater part of the year.
