Plans for Peace 2

Some of the more leisurely or indolent of the boarders at Miss King's always lingered in the wicker chairs of the sun parlor after breakfast, but this morning there were more lotterers than usual, and they were talking in accents that showed keen interest. And that interest had been aroused by headlines in the morning papers that indicated that the end of the world war. If not in sight, was at least something that one dared dream about. "I suppose Miss King will have to come down on her board," a little wenzen-faced old lady, noted for her miserliness, was saying. "Well, there's no use my saving any more pits. I suppose," sighed snother; and a third. "At least, they won't have any excuse for sweetening the cranberry sauce with molasses. I didn't like to object before. It didn't meem loyal, but now I certainly-" Doris May, who had lingered on her way to her volunteer work at Red Cross, but who nevertheless was turning her time to account with sock knitting, had at this point emitted a little stifled scream that cut short the last remark and focused the eyes of the lingerers on her.

Doris, twenty-four, and sweet of face and the youngest member by far of the King establishment, blushed with embarrassment. She had not expected to attract attention and she did not really want to explain.

"I was just thinking," she explained, however. "It suddenly occurred to me that when the war was over there more canteens to work for nor conservation kitchens to help with nor liberty bread to bake and, well, I was beginning to feel sorry and that made me scream, I guess. It seemed so wicked to have anything but the happlest feelings that it is all over. I truly shall miss the knitting--"

"Well: I am sure I shan't." snapped one of the sour-visaged members of the establishment who had, during the urse of the war, managed to knit two whole pairs of socks and a sweater. "I'm quite exhausted, I assure you, and nothing but a winter in Florda will undo the damage all this kulting has done my nerves." "Anyway, you needn't stop knitting," mother one of the company was sayng. "Soldiers aren't the only people who wear socks. ' I had a cook onceawfol creature she was, too and her husband was a teamster and be wore knit socks. I know, because she used to knit the socks in the kitchen during time that I was paying her to vork for me."

"But I don't know any teamsters," aughed Doris. "Really I didn't mean to say I was sorry, because I am not. am so happy to think that it really going to end some time, only it will seem stupid going back to the bridge parties and teas and things that we used to spend so much time on be-

Doris went about her work at Red Cross that day and at canteen that afternoon with less than usual of her natural cheerfulness. She was vexed with berself to think that she could have any selfish regrets - when she knew that in her heart she felt only the deepest of joy at the news of posalble peace. That evening Capt. Robert Bicknell came in to the boarding house from the encampment five miles away where since his return from France he had been acting as instructor. He was seized by the coterie of those who lingered in the drawing room after din-

Somehow it seemed as if his opinion concerning the outcome-of peace talk would be of more weight since he had come fresh from a military encampment. As a matter of fact the fact that he had come from the encampment made him -especially reticent about discussing it—that is, before the group of Miss King's boarders in the drawing room. It was to escape this assemblage that he begged Doris to take a stroll down the small town street with him. "But people notice so," protested Do-"You know how those women. babble, and it was only two nights ago that you were here before." "Yes," agreed the captain," but perhaps there won't be many more nights. I'm not going to annoy you saking you. the old question. I guess you made yourself about as clear to me as any girl could. and I value your advice. I may be taking a leap in the dark, but I have been thinking things over und I know now that I can't go on the way things were before the war.

"Then I was content to be cashier here in the bank. Honestly, do you know. Doris, when I first saw the paper this morning and realized that peace was coming perhaps before I get such to France of course my first thought was one of the greatest joy and then I had the selfish Yeeling of

Doris had listened intently, and her breathing, fast and irregular, betrayed the intense interest she was taking in her companion's disjointed explana-

Why, of course, Catch me ever going back to those slik things with thin shoes after I've known what it is to dress like a regular man." "And out there—I suppose you'd live in a little cabin at first and you'd have to have your baking done right there and a lot of canning and everything and there would be lots of work to do for some one." "Well, there's that, of course," and the captain's face registered a slight look of unhappiness. "Perhaps I could get some old couple to do the work for me it wouldn't be like having a home. but perhaps I could get used to it." "There would be all sorts of work for the the woman you married. wouldn't there?" faltered Doris. "Don't worry," and the captain did not conceal the fact of his annoyance at this question. "But Robert-well, you see I was thinking this very morning that, although I was so happy that the war is going to be over, yet I'd be so miserable when I didn't have to make socks and work hard and can fruit and things. I have really been happy doing what I have done and, if you'd forgive me for changing my mindand if you really haven't made any other arrangements, well-I know now that I've always really loved you."

To those unfamiliar with Turkish customs it may seem strange that Talaak Pasha, who has just resigned the highest dignity in the Ottoman empire, should have been earning his living only a few years ago as an obscure telegraph derk. Yet such big jumpe are perhaps easier in Turkey than in. any other country. For although the Ottoman Turks often show the utmost contempt for the numerous subject races that belp to make up the Turkish empire, they recognize no social barriers among themselves. In the eyes of the sultan all are equal. Thus it may easily happen that, given the necessary ability, even an emancipated Ottoman slave may become grand vister, and perhaps marry into the sultan's own family.
