This Is For You

YOU are interested in the High Cost of Living.
Suppose you had to replace your house or the contents of it and buy everything over again.
You would need double as much money to do it as in September, 1914.
Everything has gone up. The purchasing power of the dollar is about 40 per cent lower than in September, 1914.
Building costs of all kinds have nearly doubled; clothing is going up every day; boots and shoes, furniture, curtains, carpets, food, fuel, everything costs more. Fire may destroy your entire property any minute. Your $100,000 policy to-day would buy half what it would three years ago. So you need more insurance.
One thing in the world has not increased in cost—that is insurance—the thing you need most.
In short, what you most need is the cheapest thing you can buy—Protection. You need the best kind of protection too. You can have it. The best costs no more than the worst.
Phone me how much more cover you require and we will put it on today, or we will call, value your property and give you the necessary protection.

Gwen's Protege

By WILL T. AMES

Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Miss Gwen Cliphers, daughter of an Indianapolis patent and wall paper merchant and one of the kind of women who name their first boys Archibald if fine and Gwendoline if superlative, met up with Ray Ogora, son of a "Crazy" "pick" in Washington square.

Gwen was the ninety-six thousand and first girl in college graduate to come from Indiana to New York to support the heart of the world with her pen. "Has was the second young man to come from California, Syria, with the definite purpose of acquiring with his scientific capital enough to buy a license in Manhattan.

The first Cliffs youth to achieve this distinction had been Tufa Ogora, Ray's cousin. He had returned, after a brief absence which made him the subject of the golden rule of the infidels, and had purchased the most excellent plantation of Haj Akub; the departing French countess had been the Armenian doctor, seemed disposed to consider to Tufa over these circumstances. Ray, too, had returned hopelessly for Selia. He determined to put over a performance to equal or excel his cousin's. He knew of a better plantation and a newer Ford. The plantation he wanted was so near to town they could run in to the picture theater; if—

And his would have made his adventuring voyage to the other side of the world even had he known positively what had merely occurred to him as a probability—that Tufa's money had been the fruit of a series of predatory enterprises which made the current of good luck that he ever returned to Cliffs. He had got out of New York just two jumps ahead of the police.

Ray himself was entirely without prejudice as to the manner in which he might possess himself of some of the pelf of those villainously rich un-believers in America. His one idea was to get it and get it fast.

Gwen Washington Cliphers wouldn't have trusted Ogora, per se, for a tinct paint brush if the latter, per magician's carpet, had suddenly walked in upon him.

Moreover, he would have kept the keenest eyes on old Ray senior, to see that he didn't steal the knob off the front door as he went out. But Gwen Cliphers didn't know either her father's suspicious temperament nor his quick insight into human nature. Gwen, though she didn't suspect it, took somewhat after her mushy mother.

So when Ray, hat in hand, approached her as she sat on a bench in the historic square planning wonderful things for the winter to be put in her book—Gwen did not show him away, but looked at the paper he held out.

Ray had great, soulful eyes, like a deer, and said, so pathetically, "Miss, meet!"

The writing read: "Am strange man in grate country. Please show work. Am awful grate strong."

"What on earth—where did you get this?" Gwen exclaimed. She shook his head. "No speak American."

"Well, you poor soul, you've got a nice time ahead of you, sure. But who wrote this?" Ray shook his head again.

Gwen, by speaking very loud indeed, in single words, and making a series of experiments in the sign language, finally got out of Ray the two words, "Cook ship!"

"Well, you come with me," Gwen suddenly exclaimed; and grabbing Ray's coat sleeve with thumb and forefinger she steered him over to the West Seventh street "honiton" where she lived with Madame Blanc, a Swiss conjurer, who knew how to change "I've come worth of cat meat into a most delectable ragout. She dragged him to the basement door, denuded to see Madame Blanc, and to that lady said: "Here's that house, starry you wanted. You've simply got to take him."

Madame was a business woman. Ray was without English. He would be worth no more than his board. Ray's delicate eyes full of gratitude yearned to be shown work.

Nobody else ever learned the language as fast as Ray Ogora. "These people, I have often heard, explains Ogora, 'the positive genius' where she lived with Madame Blanc, a Swiss conjurer, who knew how to change "I've come worth of cat meat into a most delectable ragout. She dragged him to the basement door, denuded to see Madame Blanc, and to that lady said: "Here's that house, starry you wanted. You've simply got to take him."

Nobody else ever learned the language as fast as Ray Ogora. "These people, I have often heard, explains Ogora, 'the positive genius' where she lived with Madame Blanc, a Swiss conjurer, who knew how to change "I've come worth of cat meat into a most delectable ragout. She dragged him to the basement door, denuded to see Madame Blanc, and to that lady said: "Here's that house, starry you wanted. You've simply got to take him."

Madame was a business woman. Ray was without English. He would be worth no more than his board. Ray's delicate eyes full of gratitude yearned to be shown work.
