THE CRITIC

(Exchange)
My father says the paper that he reads isn't put up right. He finds a lot of fault, he does, perusing it at night. He says there isn't a single thing in it worth while to read. And that it doesn't print the kind of stuff that people need. He loses it aside and says it's "stupid" on the bum. But you ought to hear him holler when the paper doesn't come. He reads about the wedding and he says he's not going. He says the social clubs with a most delectable feast. He says they make the papers for the women folks above. He'll find out for sure and he says of information, it doesn't contain a crumb. But you ought to hear him holler when the paper doesn't come. He's always first to grab it, and he reads it through clear through. He doesn't miss a item or a word—that is true. He says "They don't know what we want, them darn newspaper guys. I'm going to take a day sometime and go and put them wise. Sometimes it seems as though they must be deaf and blind and dumb." But you ought to hear him holler when the paper doesn't come.

The Star Trail

By IZOLA FORRESTER

If Walt had not been young and trusting he'd never have assessed the advertisement, but when you've spent your life in western Nebraska, particularly conducting squads of cattle from range to railroad station, and thereafter riding with them, had punching them into submission to an all-wise Providence, you're apt to be a receptive pupil for guidance.

Walt was reading the first day when he found the advertisement. He obeyed the star path, his feet must tread. He was sitting on a baggage truck in the shadow of the Three Bears Express office, waiting for the agent, but the agent, laid over, his face a copy of the Omaha Eagle. When Walt was sitting on a baggage truck over its busy contents. It was down among the "Personals" Walt read it over carefully at first, then carefully, looking up once to gaze at the demure but forbidding face behind the telegraph office window. Then he read over the ad again.

Wanted - Young Eastern Widow

Wanted, twenty four, wishes to correspond with western ranchman, not over thirty. Object matrimony.

He had the newspaper firmly in both hands. There was no reason why he should not answer the appeal. He didn't have a ranch all his own, but Bill had and he had been good partners with the Triple Star outfit. The house wasn't so bad—three rooms and a lean-to. He'd fix it up for her, chuck all the old clutter he and Bill had put up with, and send up a load of multi-colored homing things for her to make her know she was welcome.

Here Walt took a second look at the unfriendly face at the window, but the girl never turned her head or noticed his existence. Presently he sauntered around into the station doorway and leaned over the little partition at the ticket office. Could he have a telephone book, please? Cherry did not glance up at all, just passed one to him coldly. He spent half an hour writing his message, took a long drink from the water cooler and handed the telegram to the clerk.

"Send it off any time it's handy," he remarked, trying to be nonchalant also. Cherry ran her pencil over it.

"Night message" asked Cherry, pleasantly, as she drew her pencil through "Dear Madam."

Walt resented her air of aloofness and lack of cordiality. He handed out a pigskin wallet and extracted a yellow bill.

"Send it now and get it there this afternoon. I don't care what it costs. Any corrections to suggest?"

Cherry's blue eyes looked him over slowly, in an assessing summary of his apparent shortcomings as an ideal suitor, and shook her head gravely, with a certain little curl to her short upper lip. Some months previously she had been courted assiduously by Mr. Ramsdell, and being the only attractive and desirable girl in a radius of forty miles she had fallen to take his offer at its proper valuation. Walt waited grimly until she had dispatched the message, then rode away with a new aggressive tilt to his hat and a sinking feeling in his heart at the desperate step he had taken.

In the days of waiting for his answer he haunted the telegraph office. Cherry was likewise postmistress, and Bill warned him of his danger.

"It's just as dangerous hanging around some female you've been once attached to as it is getting measles the second time. I wouldn't put it past Cherry a bit to try and get ahead of the eastern widow and think she's doing something mighty smart."

But Cherry held serenely to her own course and was not aware of being scornful she became sympathetic and rather remorseful. When she found Walt poring painfully over a mail-order catalogue that guaranteed to furnish a honeymoon equipment at not much per room she aided him instead of laughing. Walt found himself deferring to her taste in snowflake curtains and golden chandeliers. It was Cherry who suggested cutting out the photograph and putting in a studio willow set instead, and a low bookcase. Walt had hesitated over a red velvet set.

"It isn't becoming to blondes," she said thoughtfully.

Walt's gaze traveled to Cherry's brown, short curls and wide, brown eyes, alert as a squirrel's, and for an instant he thought of how she would look surrounded by the studio willow set. He leaned over the little wooden barrier between them eagerly, forgetful of windows.

"It's awfully good of you to tend to all this stuff for me, Cherry. I'd never thought of that freesea cooker or the washing machine. You know there wasn't any real reason why we didn't—well—didn't get married ourselves, only you seemed unwilling."

Cherry's brown head gave no sign of attention; she was getting the signal for the incoming train on the eastern track.

"Cherry, girl"—Walt felt all caution leave him suddenly. "I ain't any hand at delivering speeches, but I can't help it, now you have day after day. You're just the only girl in the world for me—"

Cherry swung past him with the willow porch over her shoulder, laughing softly, her eyes filled with mischief. After the express had passed on, and he carried in the new porch, he helped her while she sorted the mail, humming to herself up a love song but one of the range riders' ballads he had taught her.

And suddenly she paused, holding in her hand a letter addressed to Mr. Walter K. Ramsdell. This was also a large and promising catalogue for him. He opened them stolidly, but

Triumph of Modern Ingenuity.

A coupon nail is an excellent illustration of the difference between old and new methods. Formerly the nail was cut into strips and then folded into shape with hammers. Today they are made of steel and are lighter and stronger. Strips are cut with steam shears and fed into automatic nail machines.

Cleaning Brass and Copper.

For cleaning and polishing brass and copper, nothing is better than all metal rotten stone, and most of the good grades on the market are made from these materials, with alcohol, turpentine, or soap.

A Cattle Queen.

A cattle-raising season to the East—her stockyard is in fact, best, and Mary Vall, Los Angeles heiress, said to be the richest maiden in California, is in these large sales and shipments, figuring as a notable cattle queen. Miss Vall is the daughter of the late Walter Vall, who had over 300,000 head of steers and sheep on his famous ranches. Under the direction of Miss Vall she has neither the cattle domain left by the father and husband greatly increased in value. The meat barons are paying them $1,000,000 for steers and sheep this fall.—San Francisco Bulletin.

MYERS & HUBBARD

Walt lifted a baffled face to Cherry, and she laughed.

"I know you'd get one. Lots of the boys have purchased this ad."

"And you let me read that 'drop the term'?" he demanded.

"I wanted to give you a ride over after, Walt, so I could see you," she whispered. "And I did choose the willow set you know."

DROP THE TERM "WOODLOT"

Government Authorities Favor the Word "Woodland" When Used in Reference to Farm Forests.

The increased interest in private forestry, particularly with reference to farm forests, has brought about the general acceptance of the term "woodland" or "woodlot" instead of the original name of "woodlot" according to the forest service.

A large proportion of the woodland in the eastern United States is in irregularly shaped tracts, spreading out over ridges, ravines, slopes, swamps, and poor lands, whereas "woodlot" carries the idea of a small-sized, regularly shaped tract, and in a large section of the country, fenced tract. When applied to the large or irregularly shaped tracts, it is obvious that the word "woodlot" does not describe the conditions. "Woodlot" probably originated in New England and seems fairly well established there. So long as only conditions like those in New England were considered, "woodlot" was accepted as adequate, but in the last few years farm forestry has been developing rapidly throughout the country.

"Woodland" and "woods" are more satisfactory, more expressive, and avoid the possibility of creating confusion in the minds of the people over most sections of the country where the word "woodlot" has never been in local use.

Cleaning Your Plow.

Many plows, even those that have been well covered with oil or grease, fail to scour readily when first taken into the field. The following method is being used by many farmers to overcome the inconvenience attending the use of a plow that fails to clean off quickly. The plow is taken to the nearby branch of creek and drawn a few times through the sand or gravel beds that invariably are found along water courses. It usually takes but a few turns to cut off the rust and hardened grease. But for the convenience does the best work to the farmer, no matter how rusty it may be; and if the gravel does not contain large stones the plow will not be dulled.

Progressive Finance.

We were curious to see just what ideas our twenty-eight-month-oldurchin has about money.

I showed him some pennies and asked him what they were.

"That's money for the organ man," he said.

We showed him a nickel.

"That's big money," he said, and then added, "That's Hossie's money." (Hossie being the delightful person who honors our kitchen.)

Then we showed him a one-dollar bill. There was no doubt at all in his mind as to where that belonged.

"Mother's dollar," he said.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Passed the Test.

A young man from our town had gone into a training school as an automobile mechanic. In one of their tests an automobile was taken apart and it was his duty to assemble each part to its respective place. He had done this with the exception of one piece, which was missing and which he could not find. The C. O. told this young fellow that it was up to him to get this piece, so, taking his superior officer at his word, he proceeded to take the missing part from the corresponding officer's own car and he was one of four out of a class of 190 who passed the test.—Chicago Tribune.
