Teach the Children to Save

Habits are acquired early in life. Children, who are taught the value of money and the habit of saving, grow up into good business men and capable women.

The easiest way to teach children to save is to start a Savings Account for each child ($1.00 each is sufficient). After a child has saved another dollar to make an additional deposit, he or she will have a better appreciation of just what a dollar stands for, and how much work and self-denial it represents.

AUDITORS' REPORT.
In accordance with the provisions of Sub-sections 30 and 31 of Section 24 of the Bank Act, we report to the Shareholders as follows:
We have examined the above Balance Sheet with the books and vouchers at Head Office and with the certificates and returns from the Branches, and we have obtained all the information and documents which we considered necessary in our opinion. The transactions which have come under our notice have been within the powers of the Bank, and we have checked the cash and verified the securities of the Bank. We have also checked the cash and verified the securities of the principal Branches during the twelve months covered by this statement, as well as on February 28th, 1920, and have found that they agreed with the entries in the books of the Bank with the exception of a few items which we have found to be in error. In our opinion the Balance Sheet is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the Bank's affairs according to the best of our information and the explanation given to us, and as shown by the books of the Bank.
Witness, 28th March, 1920.

BOBBY AND THE H. C. L.

By JANE OSBORN

Lucille went on when she had returned her composure. "There wasn't a cent left and I had to take the cork out of the elephant. I told him so, and then he said that was all because I didn't know how to buy. He said that that was my great fault—no knowing how to buy, and he said that there were some women who could manage on a lot less money than I did and have more delicacies, too. He was very kind. Only he really thinks I don't know. But honestly John, I went to the cheapest place in town and carried all the blouses home myself, so I wouldn't have to go to places that said 'no'."

"Well, I guess Bobby just don't understand," reflected the loyal John. "Bobby's young—don't wish older than you—add there are a lot of things you youngsters have to learn. Perhaps I can teach him."

"Oh, please don't, please don't," entreated Lucille. "Don't even mention the H. C. L. because if you do that Bobby will know that I have been talking about him to you and that would be dreadful." John promised secrecy, but he went away secretly promising himself that he would educate Bobby.

"The night that Bobby was waiting for the dinner party was well-nigh forgotten. Little was said concerning the question of food costs, except that Bobby's father or mother referred to Lucille's general ignorance concerning the rudiments of buying. He had decided to be magnanimous and not reproach her, but he would occasionally tease her about it.

Then storm clouds began to gather. Bobby was away from home two nights one week and three the next. He was occupied and seemed to be in a hurry. Rather reluctantly, when Lucille asked him where he went, he told her that he was at the club. Then Lucille recalled the little bit they had had concerning the H. C. L., and she was troubled indeed. Women had lost their husbands' affections before, she told herself, because they had been bad housekeepers. She had decided to take her troubles to John—John who always stood up so loyally for Bobby.

"Then one night when Bobby did come home the conversation went like this: "Lucille, how much are you paying for butter?"

"Sixty-five cents," said Lucille. "I thought so; and you'd get decent coffee for less than forty cents, can you?"

"Why not?"

"That's what I'm telling you. But those old folks—I guess they haven't been in a market or provision store for years. They don't know—how can they know? Why, food prices have doubled in two years, haven't they?"

"Doubled, I tell you. And tomorrow night at the meeting of the club I'm going to call into that house committee and give them what's coming to them. It can't be done, gentlemen, it can't be done." Bobby had slipped from his place at the table and was addressing the imaginary club in a shouting assembly.

Lucille didn't know exactly what had come over her beloved Bobby, but she felt as if suddenly a lightning had struck from the sky and she was left in a heap. Bobby explained.

"You see, my dear Lucille, I had a business opportunity. I had a business opportunity to the club. Anyway, he appointed me a committee of one to see to the buying—sort of job up the chief who has usually had full charge. Some of the members had been complaining that for a dollar he ought to be able to give us a better dinner. But I went into the matter systematically, as I always do, and believe me it can be done. If those old fossils think it can't, they'd better try. Why, one of the members of the house committee had the audacity to call me that I didn't know how to buy."

"You dear Bobby," sympathized Lucille. "Wasn't that hateful? And then as a look of happiness settled over her pretty fair features, she said to her brother John as she asked, "Can't you tell the toms, sir?" he asked.

"It was the day after our little dinner party—and say, Lucille, since I've been looking into this matter I'll have to confess I don't see how you got that dinner up on that measly ten dollars. It's been a revelation to me, I'll say."

A Wonderful Case.
"Like a lit'r sir," said a countryman, civilly, as he overtook a footman traveler on the dusty road. As they jugged along they chatted about all sorts of things. Presently the old chap pulled out a watch of the turnip variety. "Can't he tell the toms, sir?" he asked.

"Certainly. It is exactly three o'clock," replied the other as he watched the driver set his watch at twelve. "Then he stopped him. 'I said three o'clock, but twelve,' he added. 'Oh, that be all right, sir,' said the carter, as he slipped his timepiece into his pocket. 'Her'll soon make that oop. Her be a wonderful gear!'"—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Diverse in the United States.
The latest report of the United States national census bureau once more discloses not only an increase in the ratio of divorce to marriage, but in the ratio of divorce to growth of population—112 divorces to every 100,000 people in 1916, as against 84 in 1902 and 72 in 1900. There were 112,038 divorces granted in 1918, concerning 108,702 of which there are exact statistics; of these 39,900, more than a third, were for desistance, with cruelty second, the two combined accounting for nearly two-thirds (65.1 per cent) of all the divorces granted in that year, adultery figuring far behind, and drunkenness lagging in the rear.
