Rumford—"The Home of Better Shoes"

Special Special
Every little while they tell us that the horse has got to go. First the trotter was invented, then the horse went to school, and they told us that we'd better not keep raising colts no more. When the street cars got to trotting what the horses did before.

I thought it was all over for old Fan and Doll and Kit. I posed the horse was up and down for.
"But he ain't went yet!"
When the bike came, first got started people told us right away. As you probably remember, that the horse had saw his day. People put away their bugles and went into "round or wheels". There were lots and lots of horses didn't even earn their meals. I used to stand and watch 'em with their bloomers as they lit.

And I shot the horse was gone. "But he ain't went yet!"
Then they got the horseless carriage, and they said the horse was "done". And the story's been repeated twenty times by Edison: Every time he gets another of his batteries to go.

He comes whoopin' out to tell us that the horse don't stand a show.
And you'd think to see these chauffeurs, as they go a-chaffin', it was good-bye to Mr. Dobbin. "But he ain't went yet!"

When the people get to flying in the air I a'pose they'll say, As we long have been a-saying, that the horse has had his day.

I a'pose that some old fellow just about like me'll stand Where it's safe, and watch the horses haulin' stuff across the land; And he'll maybe think as I do, while the crowds above him flit, "Oh, they say the horse is done for, "But he ain't went yet!"

Reminiscences of Georgetown

—BY—
C. W. YOUNG, A NATIVE SON.
TANNERIES
One of the old Georgetown families was the Daytons. Philo Dayton, the head of the family, and John Dayton had a large tannery and shoe factory on the bank of the river in the village in which a number of men were employed. There was a small pond alongside in which the water was raised by a windmill which had not been cleared out when the water was raised. The Daytons were tanners, and some of the second and third generations were prominent in the ranks of the clergy of that denomination.

There was another tannery opposite the Rose mill whose proprietor I do not remember, but his principal man was Bill Higgins, a tanner, and a man who made him a favorite with the boys who used to like to go along among the vats in spite of the rank smell of the hides of the pungent odor of the hemlock. There used to be an iron foundry—possibly two—on the edge of the pond in the same neighborhood, and a wood working shop, a leading feature of which was the love of working and was bent on organizing a lynch party on the murder of a colored man, and was bent on organizing a lynch party on the murder of a colored man, and was bent on organizing a lynch party on the murder of a colored man.

It is a far cry from the old road circuit to the gorgeous pageants that have sprung into existence since, but only the trunk of their own and members of the apologetic for roads, and veritable sloughs of despond and botch-umple lines of mud which have traversed, one wonders how they had the courage to tackle and overcome such obstacles. Being on the main highway, through the province, Georgetown was always a stopping place for those travelling shows, and one dimly remembers the stunts of the circus, whose names were famous in the world of lights and tinsel, Dan Rice, Joe Penland, Yankee Jubber, the Sticksneyes and ever so many more. The "old clown"—there was only one—above leading attraction, especially as it was generally understood that he clown owned the show. The boys used to wonder that he should be allowed to be chased around by the ringer, who was always in full evening dress and carried a cane.

One did not need to get up very early to see the show come but were all gazed up to high expectation a week before circus day and hard-ly slept a wink the night before. The act team was eagerly watched for and word passed along that "circus is here" and a sleepy-looking crowd of two hours to make miles sometimes, and there were so comfortable Pullman cars, but all stretched out where they could in the lumbering day coaches which carried the performers. The drivers and tentmen were quite busy during the performances. The first circus I remember showed on a side of the road from Norval to the English church, another in the centre of the village in front of the old Methodist Church, one near the White Hotel, and after that mostly in what became the Market Square. The tents were small, less in size than many of the sideshows which now surround the big top, and if there were any animals they were many, half-starved lions and tigers, who were kept in two monkey pens and wonder of wonders, an elephant, if he didn't get hogged on the way. There was a motley gang of circus-followers, campers and confidence men who always reaped rich gains.

search of prominent incidents in the early life of Georgetown, there filters through the mists of the long forgotten years the recollection of a murder which stirred the community and country surrounding to its deepest depths. As to the facts of the case this dauntless search out. Memory fails to yield further information than that it occurred in the streets of the seventh line, on or near the farm of Neville Jones, that a man was tried and found guilty and hanged for the crime at Milton, and that a large proportion of the population of the county of Halton journeyed to the county town to witness the execution.

A PICTURESQUE FIGURE
An Irishman comes into mind the picture of a native son, I cannot say, but at any rate he came to the village in all the village of a successful miner, resident in the famous old "jewelry" full of strange tales and adventures, to which the villagers listened with avidity, and which, the boys proceeded to imitate in their vocabulary, earning for themselves a name which was "Calgary" was one of the boys who used to like to go along among the vats in spite of the rank smell of the hides of the pungent odor of the hemlock. There used to be an iron foundry—possibly two—on the edge of the pond in the same neighborhood, and a wood working shop, a leading feature of which was the love of working and was bent on organizing a lynch party on the murder of a colored man, and was bent on organizing a lynch party on the murder of a colored man, and was bent on organizing a lynch party on the murder of a colored man.

SERVING OUT THE GAMBLERS
One incident that comes to mind is that of a gambling table, which was running a wheel of fortune, using a table covered with all sorts of divided into numbered spaces, on which were placed cheap jewelry, silver coins, etc. It was a pure skin game, with no chance for anybody against the manipulation of the revolving wheel, and in the course of time two young men were heavy losers. They immediately went to the magistrate, and complained of the same magistrate, who told them they had better get out of town as quickly as they could, and that he would see they proceeded to put into practice.

THE GEORGETOWN VOLUNTEERS
All Canada was worked up in 1861, over the possibilities of war between Great Britain and the United States over the Trent affair, which arose out of the taking of two envoys of the Confederate Government by an American man of war from a British steamer "Trent" on their way to Europe. The volunteer movement took its birth in Georgetown, as in every Canadian centre of population. Captain Young organized a company, in which a drill sergeant was furnished from one of Her Majesty's regiments. The first instructor was Corporal Campbell of the P. C. O. His uniform was of dark green, that of the company the bright blue. Campbell having completed his term in the army, became a civilian again, taking his proper game of blood and married and settled in Georgetown, obtaining a position in the paper mill. His successor, "Herbert" Woods, was a "contraband" being a heavy-set bearded man from the Scots Fusiliers Guards, with a very gorgeous and costly uniform. Campbell became part of the 20th Infantry Battalion and saw service during the Penan Raid of 1864, acting as guard at the Sturgeon Falls, Niagara Falls. John R. Barber took command after Capt. Young's retirement and was in "five-time Colonel of the 20th."

Long before the Trent affair the 100th Royal Canadian Infantry Regiment was raised for Imperial service, and I recited for Imperial service, and I recited for Imperial service, and I recited for Imperial service.
