TALKING OF CELEBRITIES.

Mr. Gladstone Had a "Pretty Taste in Women."

Still under a veil of anonymity not too concealing, "A Woman of No Importance" has written a volume of "Recollections and Reflections." Some of the "recollections" are rather startling, but the reflections are never unkind. In the prevailing fashion, politicians are not spared. Gladstone, we are told, had a "pretty taste in women."

The Times accidentally surprised him kissing Mrs. Cornwallis-West, quite a harmless little affair, but it impressed itself on my memory, for she was pretty, soft, and round, while he looked like a hungry hawk, with fierce eyes and beak, pecking at her, she writes.

Mr. Balfour is dismissed with the remark that he has disappointed many, and that I gather that the public trust Mr. Balfour more or less, and many believe that when he is trying to do it for the country's consumption. They do not trust Mr. Lloyd George when he is trying to do it for the country's consumption, and Mr. Lloyd George is not trusted when he is trying to do it for the country's consumption.

A Lion's Share.

Edward Barclay, a mining engineer of Teikafa, on the head waters of the Kasai river, in the Belgian Congo, where he had been prospecting for oil. He brought back four elephants and a lion.

Adair, from being bitten by an unfriendly lion or trodden by a wandering gavel, Mr. Barclay said, the Kasai country was a good place to sojourn. The natives, he said, had been cannibals, but kindness, combined with firearms, had cured them of the habit.

The Belgian authorities will not allow hunting of elephants in the district under their control except by special permission, he said. "We had lions, leopards and all kinds of deer and antelope, but the chief supply of food was sheep and goats."

"While hunting in the Kasai river we found that it was inhabited by the gavel, which is a cross between the Egyptian crocodile and the South American alligator. It has four web feet, and two tusks which turn upward through the snout. The reptile will attack a man in the water and prefers white meat to dark. The younger species are very good eating."

The lions did not give any trouble to the white residents in that part of the country, except that their snoring on the verandah at night disturbed the children.

English Women Rebel. Spinners who lament the scarcity of marriageable men will read with interest the recent statement by Lord Northcliffe of the effect that England, his native land, finds herself with two millions more women than men. This leads the Bellator to devote its leading editorial to this post-war condition, which it calls "A Sex Rebellion."

Commenting on Lord Northcliffe's assertion that two million more women than men "means a serious problem in England which, reduced to its final form, means an economic problem," the Bellator asserts that these "restless, well-equipped, unsatisfied women" of a ruling nation have not only undertaken to change their position with the times, but that "they are demanding a new moral code." Incidentally they are fighting the cry, "Give the jobs back to the men" and are urging protective labor laws.

Bride Behind the Veil. A quaint marriage custom is in vogue in the Andaman Isles—the pearl settlement to which "lifers" from British India are sent.

There are eighteen thousand prisoners in the settlement, and every Saturday morning all women who wish to be married are heavily veiled and paraded round a square. Men prisoners, qualified by good conduct for the privilege of marrying, stand outside this magic circle, judging as best they can the merits of the candidates.

When a maid makes a selection he is at liberty to have the object of his choice picked out and the veil removed. No alternative to accepting the woman then remains to him. Women, on the other hand, have the option of two refusals, but the third occasion is final one way or the other.

Moscow's Reading Habit. Monthly like Shelley was in the habit of reading as he walked the London streets. According to his biographer, "he could neither swim, nor row, nor drive, nor skate, nor shoot." He seldom crossed a saddle, and never willingly. The only exercise in which he can be said to have excelled was that of threading crowded streets with his eyes fixed upon a book. He might be seen in such thoroughfares as Oxford Street and Cheapside, walking as fast as other people walked, and reading a great deal faster than anybody else could read.

The bicycle with two wheels of about the same size dates back to 1810.
