LONGING

I want to go back by an ancient way on a path that I used to know,
To a stream that laughs as its rippling waters flow,
I want to stand where I used to stand, far from the haunts of men,
And walk for a while on the gleaming sand, and fluff my youth again.

I want to go back to an orchard where the trees grow tall and old,
Where you hear the cry of the whippoorwill when the tale of the day is told,
I want to sit in the camp fire's gleam and watch the shadows play,
And dream the dreams that I used to dream ere life grew grim and gray.

I want to go back to a homestead old, in the shade of a big elm tree,
And watch the sunset lose its gold as the dusk comes stealthily,
I want to list to the meadowlark as he sings from the grassy plain and sit as the twilight fades to dark over the fields of waving grain.

Aye, it's there if I had my way I'd go, for the old trails call to me,
Where the birds still sing and the blossoms blow and life goes peacefully,
And so I know it will be some day, as it is with mortal men
When they'll say he's gone by an ancient way and he's found his youth again.

Notes and Comments

HON. F. C. BIGGS has introduced a bill in the Ontario Legislature providing for the continuation of a stock on account at highest rates, an amendment to the Provincial Highways Act providing that counties may issue debentures for five instead of three per cent. of the authorized assessment and authorizing the capitalization of moneys from motor license fees for road purposes.

THE DAYLIGHT SAVING question is up again. Toronto changes its clocks May 14 and again September 17. It's all right where it's popular, otherwise it's irritating and confusing. Any one who likes an amiable daylight saving without changing the clock by going to bed at dark and getting up and at it again with the sun. There is some word of the rail ways adopting it again this year, which will be an inconvenience except in the few cities where it is in vogue. Unless it can be made general, Daylight Saving is more a hindrance than a help.

TO ENCOURAGE cleanliness and tidiness among school children, a novel suggestion has been made that mirrors should form part of the ordinary school equipment. The looking-glass has a very distinct educational value and the more careful the home the more probable it is that a looking-glass, if one is around at all, will be only a few square inches in size. The consequence is that children who are frequently reprimanded for their untidiness and dirtiness, scarcely ever see themselves, and so lose the strong personal incentive to improvement which they might gain if they had an opportunity of contrasting their own untidy appearance with the neatness of many of their school fellows.

Strong for Teachers

A recent issue of the Milton Reformer contained the following item:

We were favored last Thursday evening with a brief talk from Miss Jennie Clark of Walkerton, Provincial Organizer of the Ontario Women Teachers' Federation, who explained to us the aims and objects of this organization. She claimed that the women teachers in our public schools have as much right to form themselves into an organization for mutual protection and benefit as any other body of men or women, professional or otherwise. In other professions and organizations the members thereof fix for themselves the minimum fee or salary which they will accept for services rendered, but at present the public school teacher, whose work is probably the most important of all the professions, in that it lays the foundation of the same, has no say as to the minimum amount to be charged for their services in the schools. They have to accept whatever salary the Boards decide they can pay them.

We entirely agree with Miss Stead in her contention that teachers should have the right to say what they will take for services rendered. What would a lawyer, or a doctor, or dentist, or any other professional man think if they had no say in the matter of charging for services rendered, but would have to accept whatever amount the person served had a mind to offer? There would might soon be a big rumple among the professionals, and rightly so. The whole matter of the goose should be sauce for the pander also, and, in our opinion, public school teachers, the most important class of people in the civilized world, what a demand for their work consists of laying the foundation of all professions, should have the undoubted right to say what the minimum salary shall be for services rendered by them in our schools. If not, why not?
