After seeing a business man light a cigar and flip the match thoughtlessly into a corner of his office near a basket, a visitor wrote the following paraphrase of one of Kipling's best known poems:

"If you can lose a match into a clearing,
And never give a thought to put it out,
Or drop your cigarette butt without fearing,
That flames may kindle in the leaves about,
If you can knock the ashes from your brier,
Without a glance to see where they may fall,
And later find the forest all aflame,
Where you have passed with no one near to call:
If you drive your auto through the working,
And cast your stogie stub into the slipshod,
Unmindful of the danger therein lurking,
Or homes or happiness that you may smother;
If you can leave your campfire while 'tis glowing,
No thought of industries that it may blight,
Or of the billion saplings in the growing,
Turned into charcoal ere the coming night,
If you can start a fire beneath a brush pile
When the wind is roaring like a diabolical gun,
You surely should be jailed without a trial;
And labelled as a lunatic, my son."

Epidemiology of Golf

If you ask the average layman who plays golf what he thinks of it as a game he will probably say "It's great," or "It beats anything else in the world," or words to that effect. All this is very true and has been said a million times and therefore it is refreshing to get it headed out to us a little differently once in a while.

J. A. Scott, well known in the golf ball industry, who went to Panama recently on a visit, came across what might be termed the "Epidemiology of Golf." It appeared in Modern Hospital and was written by a physician in the Canal Zone.

After a careful perusal of the article one feels that the safest course to pursue is to agree with the doctor. It has been estimated that after a certain length of time in that wonderful climate they do get that way. The article reads as follows:

Golf is a chronic, incurable disease occurring in all climates at all ages, but most often among males in the fourth decade, and characterized by alternate periods of mental elevation and depression. The disease is ushered in by an acute myalgia of the muscles of the trunk and extremities and delusions of wealth as evidenced by the unbusinesslike purchases of bags, clubs and balls. In the initial stage there is a marked change in the vocabulary and apparently meaningless words, such as toe, lie, machie, bunkers and so on, are introduced into the conversation. A subvariant known as chingolf, is recognized.

Physically, the disease is characterized by the loss of the equatorial midriff, general ballooning of the musculature, tanning of the face and forearms, and general increase in the co-ordination of brain, eye and muscle. A marked irritability alternated by periods of bronchitis is to be noted in cases of long standing. The disease is most violent on Sundays, holidays and convention periods. Although associated with insect life, golf is spread by intimate contact with persons in the chronic stage. A subvariant, known as chingolf, is recognized.

Golf appears to have had its birth in Holland and numerous pictures depicting its victims putting in a stake set in the middle of the ice are still extant. It is believed that these represent merely the hibernating form of the mania. The stake is still used in different form.

Introduced in Scotland by sailing vessels, it spread rapidly in spite of many legislative acts and formed there an epidemic focus which has never been eradicated. Thence it spread into England forming several virulent subfoci, one of the most active still remaining at Blanktheth, also famous for its highwaymen. The connection between the two has never been established. Delegates to the forthcoming convention of the American Hospital Association are warned that West Baden is one of the most virulent subfoci in this country.

Modern transportation has helped the distribution of golf round the world, at first gaining entrance to the larger centres, whence it has travelled out to the more sparsely settled districts. Thus from an urban disease it has gradually become metamorphosed into an affliction of towns and country alike. This spread cannot be viewed with other than alarm by those engaged in the public health and hospital fields.

A disease that may attack both sexes at all ages, which reduces the morbidity and mortality rates, which promotes longevity and lays snare, strike to the roots of the hospital and health work or livelihood. Worst of all, all regressive measures seem futile. The clergy has preached against it as an enemy of church attendance; business men have realized that they must either give up golf or business and have sacrificed the latter; poets have raved over the fact that nothing will rhyme with it, yet it greets forward, and audaciously attacking all with whom it comes into contact.

One armed men have succumbed to it; advertisements for artificial limbs now show a central figure just about to smile a drive; and as for the collar and shaving soap ads, what would they do without golf? Women no longer exercise with a croquet mallet and a box of chocolates; instead they wield a mallet and abase the cardinals' cadaver. Yes, golf has come to stay, and relief can only be gained by submitting to the inevitable infection.

THINK RIGHT

As a man thinketh in his heart so is he.

Think smiles, and smiles shall be;
Think doubt, and hope will flow;
Think love, and love will grow;
Think hate, and hate you'll know;
Think good and good is here;
Think vice—it's jaws appear!
Think joy, and joy we'll own;
Think gloom, and dusk descends;
Think faith, and faith's at hand;
Think peace, and peace will come;
Think fear, with brooding mind,
And failure's close behind;
Think this: "I'm going to Win"
Think not what has been;
Think "Victory," think I can!

Then you're a winning man!
