Staged a Humana Bullfight.

A bullfight, complete and thrilling in all the usual details, yet without cruelty, without revolting features, and without the shedding of a drop of blood! That seeming impossibility was recently staged with complete success in connection with the Mexican Independence day celebration in Los Angeles, thanks to the inventiveness of a California man, says Popular Mechanics.

The bullfight was acted exactly as the ordinary Mexican bullfight except that, instead of the usual sharp-pointed blades which are thrust into the animal, blunt prods with a gusted base were used. With these sticky weapons the picadors charged the animals. The adhesive base, instead of penetrating the skin, held the animal firmly against the blade, giving the appearance of reality without hurting the animal in the least.
 In this manner, all the skill and excitement of a real bullfight were retained, but the barbarous features were eliminated, and the usual exciting impressions of the fight removed.

Vaccinate Against Insanity.

"The brain of an insane person may be likened to a piano, the intricate mechanism of which is broken, rusted or clogged," says Dr. W. Ford Robertson, pathologist to the Scottish asylums. He shows that insanity, like various other diseases, is frequently caused by bacterial infection and can be cured by vaccine injections. "The recorded observations," he states, "would warrant the conclusion that the bacteria that most commonly cause acute insanity are streptococcus pyogenes, pneumococci, bacillus typhosus, bacillus anthracis, and bacillus typhosus. If the form of insanity known as 'dementia praecox' could be prevented or cured, states Dr. Ford Robertson, the lunatic asylums would be more than half-emptied in a few years' time," and he shows that dementia praecox in its early phase has been cured in six months by vaccines.
