The Agent's Responsibility is a Heavy One

PROVIDED he takes his profession with the seriousness of the doctor, of the lawyer, or of the Minister.

PROVIDED he feels that he has been lax in his duty to any fellow man who has suffered a loss that could have been covered had he been diligent in his business.

PROVIDED he feels that on every policy he signs, he is attaching his signature to a document obligating him to make good if the Company whose contract he O.K's, by attaching his signature thereto, does not.

PROVIDED he feels a sense of personal and moral responsibility if one of his clients suffers a loss under a policy issued by him in a company unable to settle the claim.

PROVIDED he has a conscience, knows the difference between good and bad insurance and will sacrifice personal profit rather than to place a client under risk by selling him cheaper insurance in an unsafe company.
