They Don't Owe Me a Cent

That's what a person will say about a pair of shoes that have been satisfactory in every way—when they are laid away for the last time, worn out, but they have earned their cost. No longer of any use—but they've been reliable—trustworthy—dependable—every minute since I bought them.

That is something that we try to have true of every shoe we sell

To please us it must please you; to please you it must earn its cost by giving proper service.

If they don't please you tell us—if they do tell others.
