> INTO the hills I climbed last night and from a lonely crest I watched the fading, failing light that closed day's eager quest. And as the purple shadows crept up, up from peak to peak, day's hungers passed, day's longings slept; I knew the peace I seek. It was for but a little while dusk's loveliness remained; earth sank to slumber with a smile while daylight swifty waned. So, sometimes, on the hills, of life, for but one golden hour, can forget all care and strife while hope's sweet blossoms flower. On hills of life where for a time my feet tread lofty ways, I hear all notes of being chime into a hymn of praise. I see all shadews there dissolved ose sun-bright peaks; my spirit, with its problems solved, finds there the peuce it seeks.
