Terra Cotta

A number from here, attended the Diamond Wedding Anniversary at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. Parr of Geelph, last week, being the 60th Anniversary of their marriage. It will be remembered that Mr. and Mrs. Parr, prior to their removal from our village some time ago, were among the early settlers of Terra Cotta, then known as Salmonville. Mr. and Mrs. Parr were the recipients of many valuable and useful presents, and received many congratulations. We also join with the many friends in extending congratulations, and hope they may be spared for many years, to enjoy the fruits of their arduous labor.

In Memory of Fallen

Armistice Day fittingly observed in Georgetown

The eighth anniversary of the Armistice was observed in Georgetown on Thursday last. Although the number of observations took tangible shape that was evident on every hand, the deep significance of the anniversary was beyond the power of mind to penetrate or words to express.

The town bell was tolled from 10.50 until 11 o'clock when all its meaning was focussed into a little period of silence. Two minutes of cessation in the rush of the present time world held the memories of what the Armistice meant to hundreds of people in Georgetown and around it to millions of people over the world. The stillness that made a sort of gap in life at 11 o'clock fairly throbbled with human feeling with remembrances of proud sorrows and with gratitude for the relief that peace brought.

Following the two minutes of silence the gathering led by Mr. A. B. Castell sang "O God our help in ages past." The placing of beautiful floral tributes on the monument was followed by the singing of "O Canada" and prayer by Rev. Kenneth Maclean. Rev. F. H. Wase read from the scriptures and the gathering joined in singing "Onward Christian Soldiers." An appropriate and earnest address quite edifying in its memory of our fallen heroes to a close.

Their name liveth forevermore. I know a land where poppies grow And there beneath the green-grass ground A warrior of our land; And there beneath the green-grass ground The grave of one I loved is found, Where lies sleeping, calm and sound, That Britain still might stand. He was the best of friends to me, True, trusting in simplicity, I'll die, trusting in me, Till death tore us apart. As we stood talking by the guns Of heaven and earth and hell and hell, A bullet tears his heart. Sleep on, dear friend so kind and true, Sleep on, sleep on, sleep on, sleep on, sleep on in perfect peace Until our Christ Himself release you from the grave, and death shall cease. Sleep, wake, and then rejoice. Within my mind I see to-day, And you are there, as far away, And you my benediction pray That God may give us men Who like you would gladly die That Britain's flag may ever fly For truth and justice, 'neath the sky, If war should come. —R. G. Lovell, Glencoe

Address and Presentation. Last Friday evening, Nov. 12th, friends and neighbors in great numbers met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Petch, Union, in order to bid them farewell before they left for their new home at Glen Williams, and a delightful evening was spent.

Rev. E. McDonald acting as chairman called the happy gathering to order, and a programme of music and readings interspersed with short speeches was rendered in happy vein.

Max. Arnott and Mrs. M. D. W. Stringer rendered solos and Max. Arnott and Mrs. McDonald of Norval gave readings which were greatly appreciated.

Then the real purpose of the gathering became apparent. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Petch were called to the front and the following address was read by Mr. Thomas F. Macdonald.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Petch:— We your neighbors and friends having learned of your intention to leave our community within a few days have invaded your home this evening to give you some tangible expression to our thoughts and feelings.

On looking back over the years we have known you we cannot but recall, with pride and gratitude the exceedingly pleasant relationship we have had with you both. In your hospital home we were always warmly and kindly received.

"Will ye no come back again?" Better led ye canna be. We would ask you to accept this parting gift not for its intrinsic merit but as an expression of our love and esteem.

Mr. Petch replied on behalf of himself and Mrs. Petch in a capital speech, thanking his friends for the kindness that prompted their hand some gift, (which by the way was a beautiful chesterfield,) short and appreciative speeches by Andrew McDonald, Thomas Leslie, Bert Taylor, Norman Cameron, Albert Dolson, Joseph Dolson, James McKane, and Mr. Fletcher and the chairman followed. The audience then joined heartily in singing "Auld Lang Syne," after which a delicious lunch was served and this brought a delightful evening programme to a close.

Want Fine School System. The Financial Post says: "We want a fine school system, but we do not need an extravagant school system. We want boys and girls to learn more than their A.B.C.'s but we do not want to pile up taxes to give them comforts and luxuries that are not essential to a common sense educational plan. It is not the function of the public school to usurp the job of the private school, which is in a position to gratify the keenly developed tastes of some of the wealthy who demand pink tea class rooms for their children."

Mother

As Appreciation

By Joseph Beaumont

I have been asked to say a few words about mother. Born at Burnley, Yorkshire, England, September 17th, 1840, mother had almost outlived her generation—those who knew her in her prime and greatest activities have mostly passed away. What was it then that caused such a spontaneous demonstration on her death and at her funeral? Mother was naturally reserved. For the past twenty years she has lived alone and taken little or no part in ordinary social activities. Her interests were her family and the Church. But all those who came to contact with her realized that there was a great personality.

Her second child of a younger son of a prominent English family, her father dying at the age of 27, responsibility was thrust upon her at an early age. She also took a great interest in the work of the Church. This I have learned not from her but from outsiders. She was a woman of very strong convictions. Her reading was very wide and she took a great interest in the doings of the English Public Schools and Universities with, for family reasons and strong feelings towards Cambridge, a sister-in-law who was a member of one of the most prominent families of the social, business and professional world. Although these connections were mostly manufacturers and business people, one cousin was a Priest of the Church of England and another became the wife of Sir William Broadbent, physician to the late King Edward. But it was her destiny to come to Canada in 1870 with no income and very little of this world's goods, yet almost at once, in spite of the fact that she had three small children, we find both she and her husband teaching Sunday School classes in Trinity Church, Galt. Moving after two years to Cold Springs we find her hard at work helping along the church services conducted in a Public School-room. Thence to Dundas, later to Anaster, then to Kiltbridge, then to Norval, and always the same story of devotion to the Church.

Those who were more in contact with her history since then has been the history of the Church. Of strong Catholic convictions, she did not quarrel with those whose opinions were more evangelical and worked just as earnestly with them as with her ideas. It was the Church that mattered, not her opinions, but in the end it was her ideals that prevailed. With the building of St. George's new church in 1879 my father began to take a more active part in official church work—became a delegate to the Synod and for many years never missed a session. Mother always accompanied him and was an interested spectator of all its doings from the gallery and no doubt, after the manner of all Victorian women, exercised a good deal of influence on the voting. Then came the founding of the Women's Auxiliary of which she was a charter member and later its President for something like thirty years. She turned the first sod of St. Alban's, Glen Williams, in 1892 and although a teacher in the Sunday School until after her eightieth year, never missed a service she could possibly attend and aided it by her means and abilities in every possible way. I do not recall that she ever accepted any official position, preferring many times her quiet connection with St. George's Auxiliary. She was a representative to the Diocesan Auxiliary for many, many years and was as well known among them as in her own branch.

Mother had many bitter sorrows but she did not let them sour her disposition or impair her usefulness. She had six sons and two daughters, but both the daughters died. My father was only 65 when he died and she had many disappointments of a material kind, suffering many times by fire and flood and the dishonesty of those whom my father trusted. But with it all, thanks to her happy disposition, she got a great deal out of life and as Mr. Wase said on Monday left the world's matter better for being in it. The years from 1892 to 1895 I have always considered as the golden era of Glen Williams and mother was one of that band of women who gave such personal service to the community and of which I have written in another place. I cannot even begin to name the long list of clergy and dignitaries.

Dr. Duke, the minister, welcomed them, on behalf of the church, in appropriate words, and then preached on the higher lessons of the fireman's calling. He pointed out that it must not be supposed that modern civilization is entitled to all the credit for devising means of extinguishing fire and saving life and property. We find a regular fire pump in operation for this purpose at Alexandria in Egypt two centuries before the Christian era.

Wholesale soliciting of funds in the name of charity seems to have become a lucrative occupation for a small army of workers under the direction of the nimble wits of the larger cities who find an easy living in swiping upon the public purse.

The Canadian people are generous. They respond quickly to every appeal for aid and the fact that the majority of us do not see these appeals very closely makes it possible for a great many abuses to creep in.

Many people reason they would rather be caught occasionally by unworthy appeals than to lay down a hard and fast rule of no donations and thereby turn down many a worthy cause. This community, and every other community, should have some point of cleanness where the wheat could be separated from the chaff and those worthy of assistance given some letter of endorsement that will permit them to present their appeals for aid in a dignified and proper manner.

Charity does, and should, begin at home. After we have taken care of all local needs we should see that whatever we have to spare goes into proper channels.

Lights for Plowing. An innovation among the farmers, or some of them at least, was noticed the past week or more, says the Starfile Tribune, when search lights or head lamps have been placed on tractors enabling the farmer to plow to his late an hour in the night as he so desired. Owing to the shortness of the season and the lack of proper farm help, this method of getting extra plowing done is a splendid idea. It shatters many hopes for an eight-hour day the year round on the farm. Farmers in White Church have been noticed plowing as late as 11 o'clock at night, which accounts for some of the farmers being so well up with their work despite the unusually wet season.
