We have to make us glad: But while on earth God gives to you . And me just one dear dad. I'm thinking now of years ago. When I was but a lad, _An' after school I used to work Around the farm with ded.

I used to get so tired out When eventide was come That I got sorter auxious-like About the journey home But father used to lead the way, An' then turn round and say. So cheerin'-like, so tender, "Come My son, you're almost hum."

When follorin' father home. I'm old an' feeble now, an' grey. An' trombly at the knee; But life is jest the same today As then it seemed to be; For I am still so tired out When eventide has come

That I get kinder anxious like

That allers used to help me some,

About that journey home. Now father's footprints mark the way That I should travel home; His voice, still so cheerin' sweet, Whispers at close of day:

"Bon! plod on, till life's chores are Then foller father home!" ...Dr. J. B. Young.

WORLD'S DIRTING TOWN. harliong Rests Pitteen Thousand

Pharijons, in addition to being the dirtiest town in the world, is said to be the highest - 18,000 feet above see level. Chilled, weary, and depressed after hours of scourging by the Tibetan wind in a monotonous valley, the traveler forgets the malo dorous reputation of the place when, rounding a spur, he glimpees its solid fortress lines. Here at least, he thinks, are rest and shelter. It has a magnificent background, an overhanging parapet of cites 10,000 feet high, the Sacred Mountain Chomol-harl, the Lily-White Mother of Snow. venerated by lamas and pilgrims. On the plain, well away from the lown, is a walled Post over which the

Some laugh at its isolation from the native buildings as a sign of British supercitious alcofrace, but, condemned to spend years at Phart, I think I would reside in a suburb, even if I had to build the suburb in sulf, writes Capt. J. B. L. Noel; of the Mount Everest Expedition. Why Phari is so dirty asbody can expinin. Other Pibetan terms are quite different. The houses, built of mud atrengthesed with the beaus, horns, hair, and skins of dead calife, seem buried beneath the offal of the stables, and you descend to the ground floor from the high level of the refuse outside. In the "streets," children play in stinking pools wrapped in rags and matted in filth. Yet they are jolly, spirited, happy youngsters. If you recoil from the drains which are the thoroughfares, you can isspect the whole town by walking over the roofs and jumping across the battlements you look over the whole town, a panorems of Est terraced roofs broken only by the mangy pray-or poles and Suttering prayer flags. The sound of the bowling of many dogs floats up — many curs of the slums, over trying to satisfy their hunger on the house refuse which is thrown into the streets to rot. With the ravens, they are the soavengers of the place.

Two twin Governors, in gorgeous robes of Chinese silk, embroidered in

Members of the Order of the Backward Bloping Pea-cock's Feather and the Order of the Orystal Button, they sit in their cas-tle, their long, carefully-manleured nails (signs of exalted rank) concested by sleeves that almost sweep the ground.

There, at the receipt of custom, they extract taxes from the traders who gather at Phari from Bhutan, Nepal, India, and the interior of Tibet, for the place is a great trade centre. The amount they must send to Lhasa is fixed annually by the Central Government with these local free hand in the collection. They receive no pay, and the difference between what they can extort and what they are compelled to remit to the capital is their remuneration.

> Why a Bride Carries Plowers. Plowers from very early days have been intimately connected with religious rites. Fruit used to be offered up in sacrifice to the old gods and the flowers which come before necks of animals sacrificed on the ancient altare. There was a symbolism in all this the flower standing for the glories of the harvest-to-be, and so in olden times the marriage festival was beautified by these emblems ... Gradually the symbolism grow, particular flowers being given particular meanings. So the orange blossom as bearing fruit and flowers together stood for youth and majornity, the flip for purity, white the rose and myrtle were especially consecrated to Venus, goddens of love. given the phonetic values of the French alphabet these groups of letters take on meaning which render them quite clear to the Eakimo inhabitants of Chesterfield Inlet, Southampton Island and other territory approaching and within the Arctic Circle. To the natives in the District of Kaewatin and bordering the western shores of Hudson Bay these phonetic sounds would tell them that they were being addressed by their "Father, the High Priest," in other words, Mgr. Areans Turquetil, of the Order of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, and Apostolic Prefect of Hudson Bay.

Indians had a picture language, which is rather different. A white man invented a written language, first used by the Crees, then adopted by missionaries of various religious beliefs, until today it is in general use. This written language has been picturesquely termed "Birch bark talking," due to the use of bark and burnt stick in the early stages of its development.

The syllable characters are the invention of James Evans, an Englishman who had remained long affoat owing to the Nanoleonic wars, young Evans received a longer

"ATATAPSI, iksirarualub ok'arkuttiringmasi tawa," Neither Eskimo nor Indian possessed a written language may appear merely a typographical jumble, but if guage before the advent of the white man, although the given the phonetic values of the French alphabet these Indians had a picture language, which is rather different.

These phonetic groups form part of the message in syllable characters shown above which is the written language understood by the Eakimo and Indian peoples in the northern parts of the Dominion.

The message was broadcast by Mgr. Turquetil from CNRO, the Ottawa station of the Canadian National Railways, Radio Department, and being transmitted in acroice in the Mathodist Church. Mr. Evans encountered the Eakimo tongue was the first consistence on which the the Eskimo tongue was the first occasion on which that language had been used in a broadcast. At the same time, the prelate spoke in French, then in Faglish, 30 that all retablishing communication on a more general scale than listeners in might understand what was being said.
