for the education of those entering into the profession, and it can be said ed by the Conservative government written to us, asking for advice in research better medical schools than does canada.

Medical education is not completed with the obtaining of a degree and a license to practise. The physician must remain a student for his whole lifeilcense to practise. The physician must remisin a student for his whole lifetime. Otherwise, he is not able to bring to his patients the newer discoveries that are being made. The public are only aware of advances in medicine when the advance is something spectacular or novel. Medicine is progressing rapidly and there are, we might say, daily advances in methods of diagnosis and treatment with which the physician should be familiar.

To a considerable extent, this need is met through the medical journals. There are no secrets in the medical profession; when any discovery is made, or a piece of work brought to a successful issue, it is reported in the journals, and so, new information is made available to the whole profession.
