BIBLE HAS RECORDED BIRTHS IN KING FAMILY SINCE 1622

Ancient Volume, Possession of Toronto Man and Former Resident of Georgetown.

One of the oldest Bibles in Canada, an ancient brass-bound volume, is treasured in the home of Robert W. King, widely-known consulting engineer of 10 Walmer Rd., as a definite link with one Benjamin King who founded the King line in Suffolk, England, back about the year 1600.

The oldest Bible in Toronto, and possibly Canada, is in the famous J. Ross Robertson collection, which contains a volume published as early as 1535. The King Bible was published in 1602.

Its leather covering is aged and worn. Its pages abound with old-fashioned wood cuts and marginal "arguments." In size it is equal to several ordinary Bibles.

Possession of such a book in the early 1600s meant that the owner was of some wealth. So costly was the book that two householders, James H. Howe and Benjamin King, formed a partnership to buy it.

Evidently they came to some clear understanding about this partnership, for Benjamin King took the title leaf for his family record, and Howe the fly-leaf to the New Testament.

The instalment payments must have gone heavy for Benjamin, broke up the partnership eventually. He retained the family record contained in the first few pages, and Howe from a much smaller Bible were worked in by a bookbinder.

The Bible has never left the hands of at least one of the families of the original owners.

The letter S appears throughout the Bible like a P without the cross mark, and some of the V's are like U and vice versa.

The first Benjamin King of whom the family has record was born early in the 1600s. The earliest birth record in the book is that of James Howe, evidently a son of the first Howe. The birth is dated Sept. 29, 1643.

The Bible was rebound in 1860, according to a memo scribbled inside the front cover. It is ever now in a state of good repair, and the pages are entirely as legible as they were on the first day when they were written.

Robert W. King, the present owner of the book, was one of a family of Ontario civil engineers who came to Canada with their father in 1845 and resided on a farm near Cobourg. His father engaged in the milling business.

Young Robert, then 18, soon showed his love for engineering.

He studied in England and in Canada, qualified as a civil engineer and subsequently engaged in both civil and mechanical engineering.

Mr. R. W. King will be remembered by our older citizens as proprietor of the King Foundry, now occupied by Harley-Kay Knitting Machine Co.—Ed.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Millere of Toledo, Ohio are visiting relatives here this week.

Mr. Johnston who has been visiting friends in Detroit returned home Sunday.
