MYSELF

I have to live with myself and so I want to be fit for myself to know I want to be able as the days go by Always to look myself straight in the eye.

I don't want to stand with the setting sun

Add half myself for the things I've done

I don't want to keep on a closet shelf A lot of secrets about myself.

And fool myself, as I come age I'm thinking that nobody else will know

The kind of a person I really am.

I don't want to cover myself with shame.

I want to go out with my head erect, I want to deserve the world's respect. And in this struggle for fame and self.

I want to be able to like myself. For I never can hide myself from me. I know what others can never see; I never can fool myself—and so whatever happens I want to be Self-respecting and conscience free.

NORAH'S BRIGHT IDEA

By Marguerite Aspinwall

NORAH laid her pen down and opened and closed her hand rapidly five or six times. She left her lips parted in a little smile as she observed the absorbed faces bent over the afternoon work.

The first desk beside her own was addressing and filling in post cards just as Norah herself was doing. She had a stack of envelopes and cards, sharply insistent telephone bells rang here and there, first on one desk then on another.

No one noticed either. Four days ago, when she had first come, some one had explained her work to her, and she had taken to it with a will. She had left her letters and had left her to herself to carry out her instructions.

The fashion department of a big woman's magazine had recently started a shopping service for out-of-town readers, and four other girls in the girls' room were employed to address post cards acknowledging the orders and to fill in on the back the name of the shop that would ship the goods. It was not very interesting work but it was simple.

She had been getting a job at the very first try! It had all come about in this way. After finishing high school, Norah had lived with her mother and her three children in a small town. Her mother had done everything that a slender little step of a woman with three children could do to keep things going and let Norah, the oldest child, finish high school. Her mother had sewed for neighbors, had put up jams and jellies and opened and closed summer cottages during the spring and fall.

She and Norah had talked hopefully about Norah's "business career" and she had tried to get the idea of a sewing phrase when they were alone together. They had made such plans for the future that they would do for the younger children in vacations—of course the trips were a long way off, but it was fun to discuss them.

Then, two weeks after her graduation, Norah had seen the founder of the "Help Wanted" column of the Sunday newspaper, had answered it in person the next morning and was engaged before a single other applicant had put in an application.

"I'm glad to get you," she said, "I'll see you work so hard they just won't be able to help moving me higher."

She had been as pink as a rose at the moment, was inwardly convinced that she was doing better than the fashion editor in a few months. She had vague notions of what a fashion editor might be, joyfully predicted that she would be one of the others who would take in vacations—of course the trips were a long way off, but it was fun to discuss them.

CHRISTIANITY AT WORK

The following letter was written by a Roman Catholic priest, on behalf of his church board, to a United Church minister (Baskatchewan):

"Kindly permit us to express our deep appreciation, and that of our entire congregation, for your kindness in sending us the report of the people to share in the generous charity of the people in Eastern Canada. We are sure that this note conveys our thanks to the Board as well as yourself and your co-workers we can only address you.

"We also desire to give you the assurance that this act of charity whereby you permitted the members of our faith to share equally with those of your own religion, is still greater good will and harmony and serve to bind us still closer together in the fact that we are a common Canadian heritage. It is such as these which destroy the cancer of intolerance which disrupts the peace and harmony of some communities. May we continue then, as in the past, to be friendly and peaceful people, each sharing the other's woes, and each participating in the other's joys.

"With kindest personal regards, permit us, the Pastor and Board of Trustees of the Catholic Church, to repeat this expression of appreciation on behalf of our entire congregation."

GURLEIGH MAN AGED 81 BORN IN MASSACHUSETTS

Attributing his longevity to hard work and plenty of it, Hiram Wallace, Gurleigh's grand old man, last Saturday celebrated his 81st birthday amid the congratulations of friends. He has never had a day's sickness in his life.

He is still able to be around every day, enjoys a "drag" at his pipe after meals, and is taking interest in current events. The radio brings him the latest news, and he is still as active as the village boys.

Mr. Wallace is puzzled when he is asked how he feels as such an aged man, but he knows "he can still eat three meals a day and also sleep if nobody is listening." Born in the township of Massawaddy, near the village of Moffat, he spent his early years on a farm, and then came to a thriving agricultural area. His family were among the pioneers of Wellington county, his parents coming out from County of Armagh, Ireland, 105 years ago. The clearness of his mind is shown in the fact that he can still sing every verse of songs learned as a boy.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

AN exchange makes the sensible and well liked suggestion that if editors should not be asked to rebuke every evil in the town and community, if anybody becomes convinced that such things need attending to, let him write an article to the paper, himself and let the name to it. There are 200 names here and possibly some women too, who are afraid to publish a letter over their own name.

RECENTLY a Regina newspaper said: "Nothing has ever occurred in this country since Saskatchewan became a province of Canada, and that 26 years ago, that has done so much to cement the bond of friendship between Eastern and Western Canada as these gifts from Ontario to the people of the West." The Regina Saskatchewan. After all, misfortune makes us all akin.

MOST of the towns and cities are trying to get all the money they can from the Government for relief purposes. Of course the towns and cities will have to raise dollar for dollar required. Provided this money is wisely spent, it may be good business, but municipalities are going to be loaded with debentures that are going to be burdensome in the future. The town that can get along with the least borrowing now will be the best town to live in some years hence.

1820 they spent $20,000,000, and in 1830 they spent $84,000,000. This money had to come from somewhere, and it came from the only natural source to which a government will turn, the taxpayer. The whole problem of taxation is one of course for the Government to decide what has gone to 75 cents and industrial organizations are re-opening factories the depressed may not get over, and it behooves the government to practice a programme of rigid economy and retrenchment instead of one of expenditure.—Barrister Kramer.

HON. W. H. Price, Attorney-General of Ontario was the guest speaker at the luncheon of the Business Men's Conservative Association (Wednesday). The speech was an important one setting forth, as stated, the policy of the Henry Government on the question discussed. "An increase in the Budget, no more Provincial deficits, $5,000,000 curtailment in ordinary expenditures, salary cuts among the higher-paid Ontario officials, in which Government members are willing to share, are essential to the functions of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board to a supervisor of municipal borrowings, were among the more significant statements."

"I don't want to be just a sort of machine always," she said shyly. "Mrs. Lloyd put her hand impulsively on the girl's arm.

"I'm glad to know you feel like that," she said simply, but with approval in her tone went warmly to Norah's excitedly beating heart. "We haven't enough for machines here either. Go on keeping your eyes open, my dear, and whenever you have an idea bring it to me."

From the corner of the office with a triumphant little tune beating in her brain in rhythm with the dancing of her feet, she turned back to her next-door neighbor, a stolid, flaxen-haired girl of about her own age.

"Isn't it the most wonderful day ever?" she demanded.

"The flaxen-haired girl sighed heavily.

"Oh-huh!" she agreed indifferently. "What I was out of the office to enjoy the night."

"I don't," said Norah. She glanced about her with a proprietary air. "Everything was different. It was her office now."

"Work is nothing more than a very interesting game," she added with conviction. "If you've learned how to play it right."—Companion.

ALTHOUGH announcements are still coming from Ottawa of the appropriation of funds for public works in order to create employment, there are indications that we shall shortly see the last of such projects. This essentially fallacious method of dealing with the country's difficulties will be abandoned, not as the result of hard thinking on the subject, but as the result of hard experience. Governmental municipalities, provincial and Dominion, are finding that it simply will not work that they cannot either by taxing or borrowing, find enough money to put all the men of Canada at work at their regular occupations and their regular rate of pay. As a matter of fact no substantial dent has been made in the unemployment situation by the appropriations, now close to fifty millions dollars, which have been made by municipal and provincial governments in conjunction with the Dominion Government for this purpose. The burden of direct relief is in no way lessened, and has possibly been increased by these projects, for money absorbed by municipalities for such purposes is simply diverted from other uses to which it might have been put. In fact the fear of increased taxation as the result of increased public works, and the interference with natural adjustment to new conditions, in absorbing industries, against private capital expenditure, and so, to a marked extent is the effect on the general public of heavy public borrowings, both present and prospective.—Financial Post.

Why do you keep going to the doctor? He said it was longer necessary. "You're reading a continued story in one of his writing room magazines."
