Here's a Little Story for Retailers

YOUNG tailor complained about his poor business. make just as good clothes as ---- 's do," he said, "and I sell them for less, yet —— s get most of the business of this district."

This young tailor felt that men ought to find out about him-that they should search him out. He didn't see that it was his job to make known to all men the fact that he made good clothes and sold them at attractive prices. ---- 's, on the other hand, advertised their business, and, of course, men went to them for their clothes.

It's the same all the world over -buyers go where they are invited to go. They buy, in largest numbers, from those who give them information about their business, service, goods, prices. This is exactly as it should be.

Why shouldn't the most aggressive seller get most business?

The world likes to buy from keen gellers from retailers who pay them the compliment of telling them about what they have to sell and about their desire for their custom.

Dumb fetailers may be fine men, may give good values, may be first-class store keepers, but the buying public prefers to go where advertisements in their newspapers direct them to go.

The wise retailer runs his business in line with what buyers want, because it is profitable to do so.

It costs a retailer far more not to advertise than to advertise
