THE BOY WHO DIDN'T PASS

This poem is offered in support of the growing tendency to give prizes, not to the pupil taking the highest marks at an examination—such children do not usually need the encouragement of a prize—but to open a contest in which every child in the school may compete in such things as regularity of attendance, conduct, industry, improvement in a given period, etc. The ideal plan in these contests is to give some reward, however small, to every pupil who achieves a certain standard. Very often a child who cannot hope to take high scholarship at school, grows into one of the best citizens in the community.

A sad faced little fellow sits alone in deep disgrace;
There's a lump arising in his throat and tears drop down his face.
He wanders from his playmates, for he doesn't want to hear
Their shouts of merry laughter since the losing has been his cheer.
He has sipped the cup of sorrow, he has dropped the bitter glass,
And his heart is fairly breaking—he's the boy who didn't pass.

"In the apple tree the robin sings a cheery little song,
But he doesn't seem to hear it, although plainly something's wrong;
Comes his faithful little sparrow for a romp and bit of play,
But the troubled little fellow bids him sternly go away.

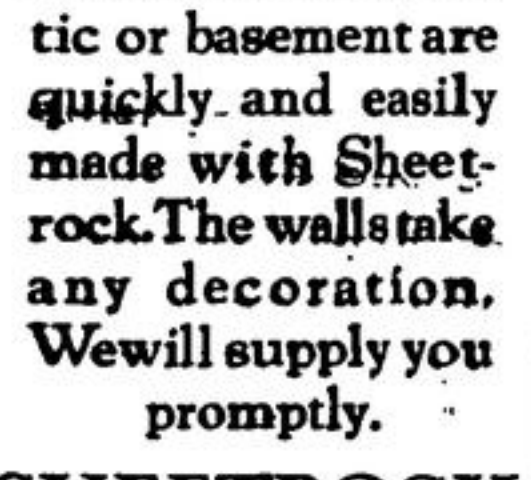

And alone he sits in sorrow, with his hair a tangled mass,
And his eyes are red with weeping—he's the boy who didn't pass.
"Oh, you who boast a laughing son, and speak of him as bright,
And you who love a little girl who comes to you at night
With shining eyes and dancing feet, with honors from her school,
Turn to that lonely little lad who thinks he is a fool,
And take him kindly by the hand, the dullest of his class,
He is the one who most needs love—the boy who didn't pass."

They Weren't There
Two Irishmen made their boat fast to a wharf and went to sleep. The boat broke away in the night and drifted out to sea. When Mike awoke he could see nothing but water. He shook Pat and said, "Wake up, quick, Pat. We're not here at all."
Pat roused himself and looked out and replied, "No, begorra! And we're a long ways from here."

Bill of Lading Protects Farmers

Excellent progress has been made in applying bill of lading regulations to truck movement of live stock, states Gerry Empson of the Ontario Marketing Board staff.

"Farmers appreciate the protection offered them by this system against irregularities practised by some truckers," continued Mr. Empson, "and most reliable truckers support the system as it saves time and protects them from unfair competition. Weekly records show the use of bills of lading is increasing steadily."

NAOMI'S PULL

lay spent and throbbing in the sand, Naomi's anxious precious little must find a mule and go along the trail," exclaimed the girl, shaking herself awake and springing to her feet, conscious of aching muscles and bruised, blistered hands.

A little way along the railroad track Naomi stumbled toward the creek with a friendly wretch of a curdling snake. A boy in the doorway snivily acknowledged her greeting, and pointing to the field where two mules grazed idly. Yes, he would lead her up the mountain to Blackstone Ridge, and hurried away to bring the mule to the shack.

The shadows were following long before the rugged trail had been traversed, the mules stretched out wearily and the nurse, swaying on the back of her obstinate mule, wrenched and rubbed muscles, and protested, but a curious smile crinkled Naomi's black eyes. She was reminded how frequently she had dreamed a taxi-cab to carry her to and from her patients in the city. Suddenly in the dusk of early evening her boy companion started out that the twinkling lights just ahead were the shacks of Blackstone Ridge. A few minutes later frequent cries of "Help!" helped the nurse down from the back of her mule, unstrapped the bundle from her shoulders, and leading her into a crude shack, made her rest on the humble supper prepared.

Almost as soon as Naomi had recovered her breath, she made her host escort her to the rough shed that had been converted into a temporary hospital, where the doctor looked at her and among the typhoid patients. As she entered the door of the rough hospital ward, she caught sight of a man in a white coat, and toward her, "Doctor Cairn! Doctor Cairn!"

"Mr. Grant! Naomi Grant—your" exclaimed the doctor. "You are wonderful, the brave, the plucky little nurse who risked so much to make Blackstone Ridge a safer place. I can't believe you are the nurse who has come to our help. How did it happen?"

It is a long story, and there is no time now for explanations. Quick, let me help you make these fevered patients comfortable. Oh, we wish those dots ground so there will be more breathing space!"

"I see you have brought your splendid executive gift with you. I can't believe you are the nurse who has come to our help. How did it happen?"

Six weeks of battle against fever, unsanitary conditions, and cruel handicaps passed before there was time for leisure conversation between Dr. Cairn and Naomi Grant. Then one evening, basking in the glory of their victory for not a patient had been carried to the night, the girl told of the challenge that had urged her to respond to the call. "But I did not dream that you were the lone doctor plying in the desert."

"I heard of the need of a doctor in this mining settlement, and it had happened to me, although my training was in the city. I never imagined this primitive settlement would appeal to you as a nurse, for I remember how in your training you looked out for comfortable and pleasant surroundings with plenty of equipment to work with. Somehow, if I had thought of anyone responding to my call of distress, it would have been you. You have always seemed ready for any emergency or condition, and quite forgetful of her own personal welfare. But I got for getting the big news that is brewing to-night in Blackstone Ridge. A big vein of gold has been struck, and the mining company plans to soon erect a small hospital. But then, I don't suppose you would care to act as superintendent of a hospital in this primitive setting. You have proved worthy of the position not only in your skill and executive ability, but the splendid power of endurance with which you have met obstacles, hardships, and inconvenience."

"I should be glad to supervise the little, primitive hospital, which Blackstone Ridge builds for the miners," broke in Naomi, her eyes blazing with curious lights. She added hastily, "I think I know the pull now which got Lucia Bates the position as superintendent of the hospital. It is the escape pill—sublimation, endurance, and accepting oneself to inconvenience and hardship—which has gained for me the honor as supervisor of the hospital, which Doctor Cairn will build in the interest of the miners."

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Minister's Report
The report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year 1931 has been issued. It starts with a foreword by the Minister in which he reviews the outstanding accomplishments of that year in an agricultural way. These include the creation of the Ontario Marketing Board in May, 1931, which has given leadership in the marketing of farm products, especially those of the dairy, live stock, fruit and vegetable industries. A survey of cold storage requirements was made and assistance given to the erection of six new cold storage warehouses at various points in the province. These facilities were of unusual service because of the long hot season last year. A ten-year plan for the purchase of agricultural lands in course of preparation. One of the brightest spots, remarks the Minister, was the Junior Extension work among boys and girls. Stress is also laid upon the marked improvement in quality of livestock owned by Ontario farmers as a result of the premium granted on stallions amounting to certain high standards. The bonus awarded for the purchase of improved bulls and high-grade rams, and the organization of Bacon Hog Clubs, increasing numbers of farmers are taking advantage of the assistance offered them.

The report gives a comprehensive review of the activities of the various departmental branches and the work done during the year. The Ontario Veterinary College and the Ontario Agricultural School, attended by students from these institutions has surpassed all previous records. Anyone interested in any particular branch of the department's work can secure a copy of this report upon application.

Wellington County Report
The Wellington County Live Stock Improvement Association aims to make Wellington County one of the best live stock breeding centres in Canada and already 95 per cent. of all the sires in Wellington are pure bred, including 1000 pure bred bulls, 2000 pure bred rams, 300 pure bred boars, and 50 pure stallions.

Wellington County now has 51 accredited herds including 24 Holsteins, 18 Shorthorns, 4 Ayrshires, 1 Jersey and 1 Angus.

Wellington's 100,000 acres of hay for next winter's roughage will be worth about $1 a ton less for feeding value on the continued rains holding back the hay and allowing the protein to turn to fibre in the standing crop. Hundreds of tons of clover hay that should have been in the barn before the wet weather started remained uncut until the second week in July.

Hundreds of city people are looking to Wellington County farms and old empty houses in the country are being snapped up for married couples must have come to Arthur village alone during the past twelve months and they all seem to get something to do, even although their income is a very meagre one.

Glover Seed Prospects
G. S. Peart, Chief of the Markets Division, Dominion Seed Branch, has just returned from a trip through some of the principal alfalfa and clover producing districts in Ontario and reports that seed production prospects for these two crops appear poor. Generally speaking red clover did not winter well owing to insufficient snow cover and meadows with really good stands are not numerous.

This prospect of a short red clover seed crop, taken in conjunction with the relatively small amount of the 1931 crop carried over, may mean a strong domestic demand for Canadian grown red clover seed for sowing next spring, and those farmers who are fortunate in having good stands on fields reasonably free from weeds should leave the second cut for seed rather than use it for pasture.

As for alfalfa, the consensus of opinion is that the total acreage in Ontario this year is about forty per cent. less than last year so that unless the yield per acre is heavy there will likely be much less alfalfa threshed than even last year, when the total yield was much below normal.

Good quality alfalfa is expected to be in fair demand for export to the United Kingdom this year.

Decreased Hog Supply
Market supplies of hogs in the United States and Europe will probably decrease during the next few months; nevertheless they are likely to be larger than in the corresponding period last year, says the U.S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

It may be, as a woman's college inquiry shows, that men get mad twice as often as women, but don't the women break even by getting twice as mad?
