In the terrible days of the War we ready to alleviate the pain of the wounded on every battle-front across the sea. After the War a humanitar-ian service, as demanding, faced the Red Cross here at home. In the out-lying districts of Ontario settlers strive for a foothold and living is hard and lumuries are but a memory. Poverty lies in wait for the weak, and discouragement and sickness soon fol-low. There is need for a strong helping hand. So the Red Cross built up a magnifloent nursing service-first one, then tricts where otherwise there would be When bebies are born in the lonely little cabins back in the bush country of northern Ontario, it is most often a Red Cross nurse who attends the mother and looks after not only the munity she serves, going where she is for treatment and advice. When these little ones need deticate major operations or the specialised treatment that only a large city hospital can supply, the nurse, through the splendid organization of the Red Cross, sees that those little sufferers get their chance of life and health.
