QUESTIONS I WOULD LIKE TO ASK

If judging drivers were my task,
I'd ask some questions I would ask
Concerned with dangers of the street
Which every one is sure to meet.
Before a license I'd want to know
What the effects I'd want to know
Like these: When little kids you see
Meet you or they meet careful be?

What have you learned of children's ways?

If on the court a romancer plays,
Do you expect him to remain?
Until the street is clear again?

What do you think a child will do?
And if into the road by fleet,
Will you be taken by surprise?

Do you drive through every street?
As though no child you'd ever meet?
You know the lights both red and green
But you know what, white, candle means?

And has it ever crossed your mind
That those who carry them are blind?
You blow that horn your path to clear
You expect dead to hear?

Do you expect alone to meet
In your car a driver who is dead?

Can you imagine a world where
The minds and bits of others read?

Would you return to think the blame
I don't know the man was home?

If judging drivers were my task,
The things like these that I should ask.
