BEGIN TODAY
Dream not too much of what you'll do tomorrow. How well you work perhaps will determine what chance you do not need to borrow. Today is here. Heart not too much of mountains you will meet. The value you bring in the vale is better. You're a fool, but a plodding hums no higher. To whom we're poor talk not too much about some new endeavour. You mean to make a little later out who did? Now will idle on forever. Till life is gone.

Save not some day to break some habit's fetters. When old year is dead and passed, if you have need of digging, then better begin today! — Anonymous

Horse Crazy

By HAL C. VERMES
Editor, Georgetown Standard

THAT'S just the way it was with the racing horses. They were never better feeling. They put their heads down, your veins and youth were wet, a thrill out of the hospitals until the Great Steward rules you off the turf forever.

We see this chap for the first time who's working around the paddock during the month race at Churchill on a quiet Sunday afternoon. He points him out to Muller and Bertie.

"Who is he?" I ask "With the unsprung sulc and the little red feather in his hat?"

"He's all right," Bertie says. "It seems like he is a total stranger as everybody he passes is giving him the once-over. It is not that he is so different but there is a look in his shining black eyes that somehow makes you start."

He watches the jockeys get into the traps on the eighth heat and his gait is all wrong. "That's a horse," he says by name, from Great Gent out of Hanley. I know this cheetily well, as it is my business to acquaint myself with all the nags that has any possibilities. Jolo is a three-year-old which we are anxious about. There is no doubt but he has something on her yet because sometimes she wins and sometimes she does not. That, of course, is to be expected but the trouble is that we do not know when she will do which.

While we are striding back to our box, Bertie asks this question: what we have already named Red like, of the feather in his Chapman, he walks along beside number five during the post parade and do not take his eyes off her till the velets chase him away from the barrier. Then he takes up a stand on the lawn right beneath the grandstand. "I'm not going to let him just go off to steam," "Old Jolo!"

By this time everybody in our neighborhood is watching this Red like as he walks up and down on the lawn, turning sharp around every few steps but there was a lean in a crouch. While the jockey was getting his horse in the traps at the barrier, Red like slips off his coat and rolls it up in a ball. Then comes that breathless second when the whole world seems to be standing still.

Being as it is the last race of the day Red like usually does not expect to be considered for the top spot.

Red like is walking on the road but Jolo is sitting up the dirt so fast that she is already half a length in the fore as they go whizzing by us like it was shot out of a gun.

There goes in for the clubhouse turn and there is a race of course because horses can all have that inside position and it looks like there will be a vicious accident. Everybody sighs as they spread out on the back stretch and we see that they have all still got four legs. Jolo is now racing the field but has not got his coat on yet. "Jolo, baby!" he screamed. "Run for papa!"

And before you see, Jolo is running. There are twelve holes in the heat but Jolo is sitting up the dirt so fast that she is already half a length in the fore as they go whizzing by us like it was shot out of a gun.
