Young man;

Many of our moral choices are de termined long before the actual dicision. We are roverned very largely by the pictures we have of our individual selves. We make choice: ur principles which later are translated nto action. Throughout the years we bulkl up preferences and tendencies and in the actual moment of temptation or crisis the want helps us. In this lesson Paul & writing to Priors who was Christian leader among the Cretans, a comewhat turbulent people. Paul'urged Titus to put his people in mind to be subject to the government. > An Unhappy Fast, L. I Paul had a whole stretch of his life of which he was ashamed. He had lived in a mood of suspicion, and he had cherished hate avainst those who held a different creed. Paul showed his bigness of soul in his readiness to alimit that for several years in youth his inner life had been full of malice and personal antagonism. It is to his lasting credit that he was able to turn away from this low standard of life and become the author of the world's greatest poem about Christian love. Paul was able to live down his unhappy past and make it better than if it had never been. This man who by word and deed extolled love had been a victim of hate. Can there be any worse hell than to live a love-

A Glerious French, 4 - 7 Paul had gained a victory over his past, but he did not take the credit to himself. Paul gave all the glory to Christ through whose grace he had been renewed. Paul expressed fellowship with God through surrendering to Christ as his Saviour. Paul fel that God's goodness had been mediated to him through Christ by sarhaving to dwell morosely upon his unhaving to dwell morosely upon his unhappy past, he could look forward to

A reflector ter Pair certain changes in requireapring flowering and fruitage in the tummer, a drab autumn and unproductive winter, and then again a progressive step, months it may be of Illumination and victory. The best way to have this renewal and continuous process is to have daily fellowship with Jesus Christ. By putting our spiritual life on a daily basis we may grow from strength to strength. How Christianity Spreads, 2 Bishop Azariah of India traces the mass movements in his discess to the witness of changed lives. The inaumovements have not come about by evangelism, but by people seeing the transformation in life among both low caste and high caste people. There is no argument as potent as a good Christian life. Paul instructed Titus to challenge the Christians in Crete to maintain high standards because the pagan people were observ-ing them and would be only too ready to point out any weaknesses among Christians. A demonstration of an upright Christian character will win others to the faith when argument falls. In nearly every community there are a few people who by their high standards of action throughout the years have established confidence in themselves. Their reputation has been setablished not by one or two especially good acts, but by steady. consistent Christian living year after year. Recently in a country town a high school principal died. The word that was upon everyone's lips for miles around the school were. "He was a good man." No one doubted it. Parents and scholars alike were convinced that here was one chan in the community who had an inner quality of life in which they had confidence. Maximus Purposes, 9 - 11 There are some people who are always concerned about marginal things in religion. They are greatly concerned about sacramental details or religious phraseology and miss the weightler matters of justice, marcy, truth and love. A very distinguished Christian minister spent the tirst twenty years of his life in controversy Then he discovered that contropyray did little good. He began bearing his simple witness to what he believed and knew and soon discovered that he was helping others. There are some religious people who are so obseased about trifles that it is a waste of time to discuss questions with them. They are not open to conviction; they wish to convince others. but will not be convinced themselves. We must refuse to let controversial people drag us down to their level. We ought to be governed by great spiritual purposes about which there need be little debate.
