Christian Fellowship

International Eastern Sunday School
Lesson, December 12, 1937.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." I John 1: 3.

LESSON PASSAGE: I John 1: 1 - 7; Revelation 21: 1 - 7.

He is a path, if any be misled; He is a robe, if any be naked; If any chance to hunger, he is bread; If any be a bondsman he is free; If any be but weak, how strong is he! To dead men life he is, to sick men health; To blind men sight, and to the needy wealth; A pleasure without loss, a treasure without stealth.

Christ's Friendliness, 1 - 3
Christ was approachable. The common people heard him gladly. He had time for people. People were with him. He was constantly interrupted yet he remained patient and responsive. His disciples could never forget the rich fellowship he shared with them. He taught them as a group yet he dealt with each as an individual. John received one form of treatment, Peter another and Thomas still another. It is interesting to go through all four gospels noting the people whom Jesus met and the different ways he dealt with them. Some were comforted, some were challenged, but always interested for that he gave his life for them. On the way to Emmaus the two disciples had such an intimate chat with him that their hearts burned within them as he talked with them in the way. This fellowship is still available for us. Christ keeps his promise to be with his followers until the end of the year. If we abide in him he will abide in us. He may live in us. Here and now he may be our resurrection and our life. He can dwell in our hearts by faith. His daily companionship may be the most vital spiritual experience of our lives. He does not call us servants, he calls us his friends.

A Fellowship is Light, 4 - 7
There is honor among thieves. Even run men have fellowship of a sort and a code of their own. Fellowship with Christ, however, depends upon forsaking every known sin and living according to his standards. Fellowship with Christ is a comradeship of light, not of darkness. There have been religions built upon pandering to the desires of human nature, but the Christian religion is a long stern discipline. It is both a quest and a conquest. When a full surrender to Christ is made there is a joy that is complete and abiding. John gives several great examples of God. He says that God is spirit, God is light and God is love, but we cannot confine God within any definition. He is greater than any or every definition. Yet we may have real fellowship with God through walking in the light of truth and love. Nor does the fellowship with God and man. We discover a new fellowship with our fellowmen. The living Christ cleanses us from sin and makes fellowship possible on a far higher level than self interest. The early apostles had such genuine fellowship that all their possessions were held in common. They were ready to share.

God with Man, 1 - 3
If a holy city should come down from heaven to earth, what sort of city would it be? Would there be slums in one section and palaces in other districts? Would members of council ever come to blows? Would an antiquated taxation system penalize citizens for holding property? Would there be conflict between city hall and the police? Would there be dozens of prisoners in court each morning? Would law be used to pursue workers with commercialism even in their homes? Would gambling be carried on openly and in secret? Would the stock exchange rule one week by fear and the next week by hope? Would hospitals be overcrowded with preventable diseases and would mental hospitals be filled to overflowing? What changes would be necessary in our civic ideals? We realized that God's spirit may be in our daily lives? Civic reform soon follows when citizens advance from a Sunday God to an every minute God.

The Novelty of It, 4 - 6
The writer of the Book of Revelation had in mind two historic cities, Rome and Jerusalem. Rome was the centre of imperial power, its glory dependent upon cruelty, oppression and war. Jerusalem had been weakened by racial pride and religious strife. The seer of Patmos foresaw a society that would be neither not materialistic, where the good of the many would be considered in preference to the good of the few, and where citizens would live victorious lives as individuals and in the larger relationships of the state. Only the spirit of God at work in the hearts of men can make a new city free from fear and friction. All religion is personal religion. We may talk of the family or the city or the nation or the human race—but these are only terms in which we think of a larger or smaller number of individuals. No matter how big and wide the truth you are thinking about, think about it long enough and honestly enough, and you will find yourself alone with it in the chamber of your heart. Only the holy heart can see the holy city. The holy city can only come through the holy citizen. That which is to be the light and law of the city must first be the light and law of the house.

Overcoming, 7
"He that overcometh shall inherit all things." He who masters dictionaries may enjoy the literary treasures of foreign languages. He who overcomes sloth and keeps in training may win athletic championships. He who conquers higher mathematics may create great architecture or machinery. He who disciplines his will may expect, entrance and opportunity. Thus man's will and God's grace appear to go hand in hand. When we gladly do God's will, there comes a sense of God's favor, a fuller dependence upon him. How may this be attained? Henry Churchill King said, "The great secret of all living is the constant staying in the presence of the great—the great facts—the great truths—the great personalities—the one great Person, Christ."

Questions for Discussion
1. Does familiarity necessarily breed contempt?
2. What is the secret of Christian joy?
3. Can God be anywhere more than in man?
4. Do we expect a perfect city without good citizenship?
5. Are we only looking for an easy religion?

"THANK goodness," said Martha Goodwin, bustling about her kitchen. "Christmas comes but once a year." She wiped back a loose wisp of graying hair with a weary gesture. "But it will be fine seeing you again, Ed," she murmured, thinking of her distant son. "Now, let's see. Those star cookies you're so fond of—" She glanced at the hurrying clock.
Loud shrieks of laughter under her window interrupted her thoughts. Those new neighbor children again. If they were dirtying up her freshly swept walk! She strode grimly to the porch. There was a path in the snow from their yard, around hers, and back again to their own, where all four of them had apparently trudge, pushing a snow ball across her walk in two places. A tussel started suddenly, and they were all tumbling about in the snow, shrieking at the top of their voices.
Martha scolded shrilly at them, and they stood up, an abashed little line of stair-steps. "The idea!

On Christmas, too!" Martha chided. "Whatever is the matter with your ma, that she lets you make such a racket?"
"She's sick," answered the oldest girl.
"Sick! Then all the more reason why you should keep still. Shame on you." The little group stood like statues.
Martha tucked in the wisp of hair. "You children come in here and sit still while I work, and I'll tell you a story," she invited.
"And you wipe your feet!"
"I suppose it should be a Christmas story," Martha began. "Do you know about the shepherds and the wise men?"
"Yes'm," they chorused. "We go to Sunday school," added the oldest girl.
"Then," Martha asked her, "shall I tell you about Santa Claus?"
Her face clouded a little. "Mother told us that," she answered soberly.
"Oh," said Martha. She dusted the flour from her hands and turned to baste the turkey. Four pairs of eager eyes watched her every move. The doorbell rang.
"Liddle! Good heavens," cried Martha, slipping off her apron, and rushed to the door.
But instead it was a telegram:
"AWFULLY SORRY JARLING BUT I JUST CAN'T GET AWAY STOP DO TRY TO HAVE A MERRY CHRISTMAS STOP GO ON A SPREE AND I'LL FOOT THE BILL STOP EXPECT TO BE ABLE TO GET DOWN FOR NEW YEAR'S AND WILL EXPLAIN EVERYTHING THEN LOVE LADDIE."

Martha Goodwin read it twice. Then she smoothed the straying wisp of hair and went back to the kitchen.
"Well," the oldest girl was explaining, "it's sort of like a chicken, I guess, only ever so much bigger." The four children looked up as Martha entered. "Why, what's the matter, Mrs. Goodwin?"
"My son—I was expecting him—he isn't coming."
"Gee," came a sympathetic chorus. "And you'd fixed everything so nice and—and Christmas."
"I'm not going to have it spoiled," Martha decided. "Here," she said and draped the holly wreath over the youngest's arm. "You," she said to the next one, "carry the potatoes, and you take the mince pie—careful, it's hot—and you," to the eldest, "take the vegetables. I think I can manage the turkey."

"But where are we going?"
"Over to your house. Weren't you about to miss out on Christmas dinner?"
"Dinner first, then presents," she suggested, and when, having eaten all they could hold, they gathered about the holly, she found a crudely wrapped present for herself. It was a picture scrapbook, somewhat smudged.
Were those tears in Martha Goodwin's eyes? Surely not, for she was smiling.
"Why, thank you," she exclaimed. "Such a lovely surprise. My," she added, "I do wish Christmas came more than once a year."
