Where a boy's modal last year might have revealed unmistakable crudity in construction, his ascend effort was almost perfection. Bome of the Guild members spent from one to two thousand hours on their small coaches and the finished jobs presented a problem for the judges. All along the line, according to Mr. McLaughlin, improvement was shown and so close were models competing for first positions that repeated rejudgings were necessary. It was a disappointment he said, that there were not awards for every Guild member who had worked so long and so determinedly. But every boy who finished a mosdi and submitted it for judging, received a certificate of craftsmanship, and this in itself is signal honor for a fine display of skill and perseverance.
