The real prob-lem to-day is not to get a crowd but what to do with the crowd when assembled. Sometimes more effort assembled. Sometimes more effort gives into advertising than achieving. In some meetings too much dependence is placed on oratory and speech-making. Often a humorist catches the ear of a crowd and a thinker unheard. Many religious leaders admit that their most effective work has been done in personal interviews rather than by public addresses. Individual work is by far the more important, yet how many who will gladly spend ten hours preparing an address will spend even five hours preparing for an interview? Tolstoy said: "Why not try the development of the individual? The state cannot be stronger than its weakest link. You must build up the state. We seek to alter conditions rather than ourselves, I suppose because we find it easier."
