THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

Y the the public Library with its cloistral, hished repose. I like to browns among the books In varicolored rows; To mingle with those lovel friends And have theen speak to me In captivating English prose Or whispered melody.

The magic lines of Brakespears And Milion's organ phrase Bring golden recollections Of soroted summer days: Bacon, Lamb and Coleridge, Macaulay, Meats. Carlyle. And Chesterfield of courtly grace. They cheer me and beguild.

The wondrous words of Wordsworth Harmonious and pure. And many another post Wrose name will long endure: The ripoling were of Yennyson. Ambroald to the lips. The stately lines of Newman. Like graceful moving ships:

ligron, Browning, Eliot, And dear old Dickens, too; With Thackersy and blevenson I while an hour or two; Irving, Lowell, Emerson. Masters of perfussed pross. Bryant. Hawthorne, Whittier, All redolerst of the rose.

Twere easy to extend the list Of much beloved names. From learned Aristotle To belliant Henry James I like the public library. Its books bring peace and rest Of all trace friends I cannot say Which one I love the best !

appetite and taste rather than for health. Especially important is the correct nourishment of children. Good teeth and strong bones may be formed by the right diet being given to children. In a European city a doctor kept achool records testing the mental development of one group of children who drank milk and another group who drank milk and another group who drank wine. The average of the milk drinkers was much higher than that of the wine drinkers. An American doctor investigated several hundred highway accidents and demonstrated that general accidents averaged one fatality each while alcoholic highway accidents averaged about two fatalities each.
